

Forum Boost

Posters, pamphlets and tickets are heralding the arrival of the State College Community Forum series to the campus. Each year the Forum offers students, faculty and boro citizens an opportunity to become well informed on world affairs by presenting nationally and internationally known men in a wide variety of fields.

This year, as in the past, season tickets are being offered at a considerable saving to those who wish to attend the lectures. These tickets also guarantee reserved seats for all the series. This in itself makes it expedient that students should take advantage of this opportunity. Good seats will be scarce for most of the lectures unless reserve seats are obtained.

Season tickets may be exchanged at Student Union in Old Main for a set of five reserve seat tickets starting at 1:30 p.m. Monday and continuing until 8 p.m. next Wednesday opening night.

HANSON W. BALDWIN, the country's foremost military analyst and military editor of the New York Times, will open the series in Schwab Auditorium on Wednesday, and will speak on "Security in the Atomic Age."

ONE OF THIS season's most popular lectures will be author-poet Carl Sandburg on Jan. 11. Sandburg has won two Pulitzer Prize awards and was considered for the Nobel Prize in literature in 1949.

Wholehearted support of the series by students and townspeople makes possible the Community Forum series. This year, the Artists Series was forced out of existence partly because of lack of support by students.

The Forum series could suffer the same catastrophe. It costs money to bring good speakers to the campus, but even more than that it takes a spirit of interest. The cost is nominal for the benefits received. Let's get behind the Forum and not let it die.

Tracking Down Tales

With The Staff

Students coming back to State this past weekend have lots of gory tales to spin about the icy roads, treacherous detours etc. However, the people who took the most round-about route were those who came by plane from Pittsburgh.

To avoid bad roads they took a plane only to find they were unable to land at the local airport. They finally came down at Williamsport and then continued their journey to State by bus.

COLLEGE WOMEN were encountering increasing difficulty in finding interesting husbands, 20 years ago, according to the Rev. Daniel A. Lord of St. Louis, who suggested that men spend more time in adapting themselves for a cultural existence.

"College girls aren't marrying as much as they used to," he declared, "partly because some of them want careers, but also because of the difficulty many of them run against in finding college men whose conversation and companionship interests them."

AS A REMEDY for the situation, Rev. Lord offered a method of cutting down the grammar school period in order to allow men more time for a cultural college education in addition to the professional and business courses which occupy most of their time and interest.

Exchange News and Views

Many unreasonable situations have been explained by a simple reference to the ancient law of supply and demand. That is to say, the dearthness or value of an article is directly proportional to the ratio between the number wanted and the number available. This may explain the attitude of many coeds.

Inflation is with us. Just look at some of the women on campus. Exaggeration has proceeded to the point where realism is merely a dream in a world of superlatives.

The "opposite sex" is not to be blamed, however. I dare say that in a similar situation with the male being the scarce item, the men, like the women now, would become rather difficult to get. In fact, that situation has occurred on several occasions, but the present attitude, continued over a period of years.

Let there be no bitterness, but only softly spoken words of caution. Things will not continue thus. The monopoly will not last forever. Future markets and demands may be protected on the basis of a thorough consideration of the consumer of today.

Mixer Tonight

Tonight the newly elected Liberal Arts Student Council will hold its annual Student-Faculty mixer.

COUNCIL MIXERS provide one of the few opportunities for students to meet their professors in a social atmosphere, away from the formality of the classroom. The success of the mixer depends entirely on the interest of the students. The extent of that interest will be shown by the number who attend.

An all too prevalent feeling on campus is that the student councils do not fulfill any worthwhile purpose and "just add another key to someone's key chain." The councils can function only with the support of the students whom they represent and if there is disinterest on the part of those students then the council will lose its purpose.

School councils plan these mixers as part of a program to promote better understanding and cooperation between faculty and students of their schools. The faculty will attend the Liberal Arts mixer at the TUB tonight as it always does. How about the LA students doing the same?

 STATE—Easy Living.

A worried freshman confided her problem to a junior "big sister". Seems she had a French bluebook coming up but she was going home for the weekend and thinking of eloping in the bargain. Her problem was, should she or should she not study for that bluebook?
