

State Fraters

Value of fraternities is a rip-snorting, red-hot issue on many college campuses, in conversation, magazines and press. Such a topic, it seems, cannot be discussed without at least half of the participants resorting to something bordering fisticuffs.

No doubt exists that fraternities have some bad points, but if such a system has become part and parcel of school life at so many colleges and universities to the extent that fraternities have, this is good proof that there must be good points too.

It is not our place to argue against the oft-cited "snobbishness of fraternity people." Contact with Penn State's fraternity men and a review of some of the philanthropic works that fraternities have affected at State and elsewhere through the years would surely tend to discredit that argument to the open-minded. Delving into the figures on support of many campus and town drives, for example, will prove that point.

THE IDEA most oft-neglected is the personal viewpoint: how much has the fraternity system helped individuals?

MANY CASES can be cited—tied up with physical, mental and personality adjustment—where fraternity life has benefited a college boy. Younger men, many of whom have been forced to face a program of wholesale adjustment by entering a school filled with veterans who are more "worldly wise," have been brought out of their shell to acquire a more healthy mental outlook.

Then there is the strong sense of "belonging to a group"—important to any person confronted with a new, strange situation, and the study and economic help offered by many fraternities cannot well be disputed.

Closely knit with Penn State in countless ways, fraternities provide revenue for the town, necessary housing for the College, a sense of responsibility for their members that is advantageous to the College, a boost for many campus-wide activities such as the Spring Carnival, and—certainly not least—entertainment for fraternity and non-fraternity man alike.

SURELY THEN, Penn State fraternities need not verbally answer any rash charges of "justify your existence or leave." Their actions chatter loudly.

Draz Takes Title

propped against the ropes for the finishing touches when the bell ended the match.

Two other Penn State's who made impressive showings in the finals were 135-pound John Albarano and Frank Gross, 145 pound-

Albarano, who had entered the final round via a 30 second knockout, had his hands full with defending champ Tim Curley of Syracuse. Although smaller than his opponent, Albarano put up a game struggle but Curley's ring experience gave him a hair-line nod and the title.

GROSS IMPRESSIVE

At 145 pounds, Gross gave it the "old college try." But Ben Dolphin, a boxer who had participated in 88 previous bouts, had an approximate five-inch reach and a ten-inch height advantage over the game Penn State battler. Yet Gross, in fighting his best fight of the season, dropped a close-one which could have gone either way.

Penn State's 125 pounder, John Hanby and 155-pound Lou Koszarek were eliminated in the quarterfinals while 130-pounder Harry Papacharalambous, after taking the opening two rounds of his fight, dropped the third and a semi-final bout. Paul Smith was eliminated in the semi-finals by 165 champ, Jim Rollier. At 175-pounds, Jack Bolger dropped a close one in the quarter-finals.

Besides Drazenovich, two other battlers, Virginia's 130-pounder, Allen Hollingsworth and Syracuse's 165-pound entry, Jim Rollier, also earned third titles. Virginia's 135-pound Grover Masteron, who would also have been after his third crown, was unable to compete in the tournament because of a bad cold.

MONFORS COPS

Army's explosive 175-pounder, Pete Monfore, was also successful in defending his title. Last year's 145 champ, Syracuse's Tim Curley copped the 135 crown.

Thus, five champions successfully defended their laurels, one regained his title and two fell by the wayside.

At 155-pounds, Joe Miragliotta, the ringwise Virginia ring leader who copped an EIBA title two years ago, was successful in regaining his crown by decisioning Catholic's Bucky Ennis. In the semi-finals, Ennis had knocked out last year's champ, Syracuse's Chuck Rigoglioso.

Probably the biggest surprise of the tournament came in the finals of the 125-pound class when Syracuse's Jim Huba upset last year's champion, Tom Cronin of Catholic U.

Next year's tournament will be staged at the U of Virginia while in 1952 the tourney will be held at Penn State's Rec Hall.

Tracking Down Tales

With The Staff

One professor was discussing textbooks with his class.

"Now in my book . . .," began the author.
"Whooooooooo," answered the town fire siren.

"One, two, one two" the sequence went and a roomful of McElwain coeds went through the motions in time with a set of those reducing-exercise records.

Somebody shipped them to Pat Harrington on one of those 15-day free trial plans. Pat's sorority friends weren't going to let her try them out alone.

IFC, Pan-Hel Ball is in the near future, and to studious, economic-minded coeds, Penn State has an unfavorable balance of trade—too much importing.

Some fraternity social efforts run like a typing exercise: "Now is the time for all good men to come to the aid of the party."
