Gridders---

(Continued from page four) week of drills. Calisthenics, conditioning, and fundamentals are being emphasized in the six week session, but Wednesday afternoon saw Bruce introduce something new in the way of offensive huddles.

The "new look" in huddles is a variation of the Notre Dame huddle, introduced by Frank Leahy last year. Under the South Bend system the linemen stand in a half crouch facing the line of scrimmage, with each man in his proper position. The halfbacks and the fullback stand facing the line of scrimmage and the quarterback stands off to a side facing the ten other men.

The Penn State system, suggested by assistant coaches Jim O'Hara and Al Michaels, calls for the left end, a tackle, two guards, a center, tackle and end to line up just as they do in the Lions' single-wing formation. From there on the formations are similar, except that State's quarterback will be directly in front of the team.

STOPS TALKING

The principal purpose of the new innovation, Bruce explains, is to eliminate talking in the huddle, usually a big problem for coaches. The new huddle places the players far enough apart to make talking difficult without it being noticeable from the bench.

The huddle also affords ten of the men the opportunity to observe the defense. The quarterback, however, still finds it necessary to look over his shoulder to observe the defensive set-up.

The squad has been running plays from the spinner series, starting, as it did last year from the "T" formation and shifting into the single-wing. A two-hour practice session is scheduled for tomorrow afternoon, but Bruce will not decide until tonight whether to hold the first scrimmage at that time.
