

Hazy Thinking

IT'S HARD for us to understand the reasoning behind Cabinet's refusal Thursday night, to go on record as opposing the action of Senate Committee on Student Welfare in granting Alpha Kappa Psi, restrictive constitution and all, a charter to operate at the College.

The two chief arguments of the government body members who opposed the resolution were; first, if AKPsi is permitted a charter it's one more vote in the national to eliminate the clause in question, and second, that such a move would require similar action against other chartered campus organizations operating with membership restrictions.

That such reasoning is fallacious is easily demonstrated. To go along with their first argument is to override even Senate's later action in refusing to charter restrictive organizations in the future. To follow this thinking to its logical conclusion we should permit even more restrictive groups to operate here at Penn State because each such national would then have another vote against discrimination.

Even Senate, which pussyfooted its way through the AKPsi dilemma, can't condone such action.

THE SECOND argument would be sound except for one important fact. AKPsi is not yet on the campus. While it has received its College charter, the national organization has not yet approved the local group's petition. Action by Senate now could stop AKPsi from ever coming into existence here.

Such arguments as were given, appear to us, to be merely a shield to hide behind while ignoring the basic question, "Should discrimination continue to be encouraged at Penn State?"

Considering Cabinet's action Thursday night it looks like Ted Allen's resolution, urging Senate to revoke the charters of all groups who retain restrictive membership clauses by Oct. 1, 1954, might just as well be thrown in the wastebasket now. Or is it just possible they'll change their minds?

Welcome Opportunity

TO THE EDITOR: We welcome this opportunity to clarify our policy in regard to public service and the selling of tickets. Being reasonably proud of our work we are sorry when ticket buyers are not present. The refusal to refund can never increase good will in our audience and we know it but our choice is not as simple as Mr. Miller makes it appear.

There were a number of people who asked to buy that empty seat, after Mr. Miller purchased the right to sit in it. We told them it had been sold, and therefore we could not take their money.

Meanwhile there may be a few people who came out to Center Stage hoping that there would be empty seats that night. But these we also turned away for Mr. Miller still had the right to sit in that seat, even if he was delayed.

As for Art, well . . . ninety cents will buy no art from us. It pays for the right to produce the script, the rental of a hall, the use of seats, the making of the material production, the printing of programs and such mundane matters. Such art as may exist in our plays is the free and voluntary contribution of those who give their time without pay. No, in a Players show the art is all free. No charge, part of the service.

Mixed Swimming

TO THE EDITOR: Why is it that not even one-night is designated for mixed swimming in the Glennland Pool. Every coeducational college that I know of has this arrangement at least. I'm sure that many of the more athletically inclined couples have long since tired of spending their evenings in one of the three theatres.
