

On Cheating . . .

The merits of the honor system as compared to the advantages of firm supervision at examinations will receive a thorough milling this evening.

IN 121 SPARKS, in an open debate, Pete Giesey, IFC prexy; Bob Keller, Tribunal head; Joel Fleming, ex-chairman of the State party; and David Copeland, member of the College's debate squad will have it out.

The question to ponder over is, "does cheating indicate the student's inability to grasp the course without aid—is it entirely the student's fault or can this fault be shared with the professor and the course?"

An old maxim of education, (apparently very old and ancient in this age of mass education) "if the student hasn't learned, the teacher has not taught," has some degree of merit.

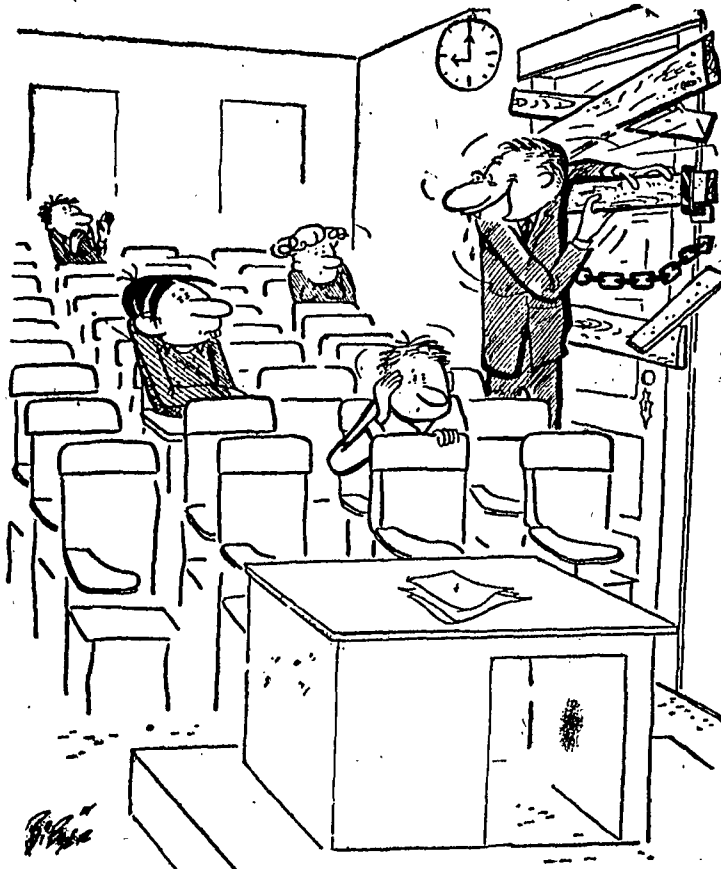

MANY BELIEVE that the honor system in its strictest sense is merely an unattainable ideal. The other school of thought claims that strict supervision and regimentation along fascist lines is best.

Definitely the current situation at State leaves much to be desired. The road to improvement is wide open.

Maybe tonight's debate will partially solve the problem. Why not go and listen in?

Colorful Traditions

TO THE EDITOR: No, gentlemen, fascism has not returned to the Penn State campus. In its place one of the most colorful and best loved traditions ever to appear on any College campus may return to Penn State.

The final proposal on Freshman Customs will come before All-College Cabinet next Thursday evening. I urge you to attend and voice your opinion in this regard. But when you come, come with pertinent facts and opinions—not picks and shovels.

Voting Fraud

TO THE EDITOR: Voting Fraud at Penn State??? (Note: The writer of this article will not swear to it that the following is true).

On Thursday, March 16, I overheard a conversation that went along as follows: (Mr. A is a member of one of the "frats" sponsoring a sweater queen; Mr. B is an independent going to chow at the Nittany-Pollock chow hall).

Mr. A: "How many 'Collegians' were delivered here today?"

Mr. B: "I don't know; as many as usual I guess. Why do you ask?"

Mr. A: "A few members of the 'frat' sponsoring the other queen contestant work on the Collegian staff, and I sort of think they're hijacking papers to get voting applications."

Well, I go to chow every morning at 8:15 and there are plenty of Collegians lying around, but Friday, March 17, 1950, I went at 8:00 and not a Collegian was in sight. Well, I'm not going to investigate what happened to all the papers, because I don't give a damn who wins now, but you who read this can draw your own conclusions.
