Plans for the restoration of customs were revealed last week. At an open meeting of Tribunal Tuesday, several students voiced opposition to part or all of the program.

Most of the speakers challenged the "right" of upperclassmen to "belittle" freshmen. The majority, however, did feel that some form of customs of a constructive nature was in order.

Several additions to the customs program were suggested by members of the Cabinet and by other students present.

"We didn't want to make the first year of customs one that would really be tough," Gabriel explained in answer to the suggestions.

Gabriel pointed out that the restoration of customs must be made gradually and that future student government groups could take whatever action they deemed necessary.

A motion to permit freshman conversation with women, proposed by Richard Wertz, president of Physical Education Student Council, was voted down.

Gabriel pointed out as the aims of customs the following:

1. a united student body.
2. school color.
3. improved spirit as a result of the above two.
4. an improved educational institution.

with sincerity and acted well in a role that was not too demanding.

Kranich Uses Dialect

Joel Kranich employed a farcical dialect and a feigned stupidity to milk the most out of his role as a western bad man, ably assisted by Jack Krusen as a companion villain. Katherine Weber was sufficiently screwball as a dumb brunette, and Frank Lewis seemed natural as the heavy—but not too heavy—villain. The dance routines created and directed by Harry Woolever were lively and imaginatively conceived, and the inexperience of some of the dancers was covered up well. In the finale, however, there were just too many people on the stage. The feminine members of his crew seemed to get a kick out of their dancing work, and the weaker sex easily outshone the males in this division.

Woolever, Bowles Good

Woolever and Patricia Bowles presented one of the best dances in their "Embraceable You" number. Joan Witherow did well enough in her "Barbary Coast" routine, and Michaline Clay-smith was lively in her short Spanish dance.

The chorus generally was adequate, but the Harmonaires sounded a bit too much like a barber shop quartet for a western show.

The set was realistic and impressive, in keeping with the western theme.

Chimes To Tap New Members

Chimes, national sophomore women's honorary, will tap new members sometime in the near future. The exact date is a secret.

Any fourth or fifth semester girl is eligible for Chimes if she has at least two major activities and a 1.5 average. Selection is made by present members of Chimes after consulting activities cards in the Dean of Women's office and with the recommendation of hostesses. Any girl interested should make certain her activity card is up to date.

Clapper, national Chimes magazine, with news about the various chapters of Chimes, is now available to students in the Library. Bettina de Palma and Meg Grube are co-editors of the publication.

Beneke---

IFC meeting Wednesday night. AUM and each fraternity will have a booth formed by arranging chairs in a rectangle. In the past chairs have usually been lined up in a row around the perimeter of the floor.

Dance Is Semi-Formal

The dance, sponsored by Interfraternity and Panhellenic Councils, is a semi-formal affair, with tickets priced at $4 per couple. It is the first All-College dance of the Spring semester.

Beneke formed the orchestra in 1946 as the Glenn Miller Band with Tex Beneke, opening at the Capitol Theatre in New York City. Major Miller had been lost in December, 1944 on a routine flight from Bedford, England to Paris, while he was in the Army Air Corps.

Glenn Douglas and Buddy Yeager will also appear with the Beneke Band as featured singers. Yeager is a singer of novelty numbers.

The Ball committee included Nancy George and John Senior, co-chairmen, Gilda Greco, Carl Hendrickson, Louise Inserra, and Peter Kalandiak.

Artist Wins Prize

John T. Biggers, negro artist who received both his bachelors and masters degree from Penn State, has been awarded the $200 purchase prize in the 25th annual exhibit of works in Houston, Texas.
