

Houck Drive

Sentimental aspects of life are often what make it livable and worth enjoying. What's more, they often pack a punch. Witness the letter sent this week to Herbert Axford, chairman of the drive for the Leo Houck Fund for Cancer Research.

Postmarked Harrisburg and written in an immature scrawl, it's from a boy who heard there was a Leo Houck Cancer drive at Penn State. He writes:

"Dear Sir I wish to donate a doller to fight cancer I saw in the Harrisbug paper that you had star a fund to fight cancer. I an giving the doller in the memory of the Great Leo Houck. I an a Penn State fam. I hope Penn State will win the boxing titly. Your truly John Weaver."

Anybody who has a spark of the sentimental will certainly be touched to the quick by this letter, which points up strikingly the tragic death by cancer of Coach Leo "Fred" Houck, the hot-stove philosopher whose "Fred" has become a Lion watchword, and underscores the plea for student contributions in the drive which ends today.

Veteranitos Fever

TO THE EDITOR: I am writing this letter not to support any group or organization, but to air my views on that person who classifies himself as a veteran. Might we clarify the name now. By veteran, I do not mean those real honest to goodness war veterans, but those "world owes me a living veterans." Those veterans who got into the service after the war was over and quickly absorbed the veteranitos fever. They are the ones on campus who are constantly griping about everything. They're not loyal to any school and are constantly finding fault with Penn State.

They gripe about the town, school, classes, professors, about living conditions, and fellow students. In short, they're professionals. They offer the excuse that when they're griping, they're happy. What a fallacy! It's no wonder that people say, "those veterans, when they're gone, we'll have the real college student." Well, might I add that they didn't say that to the real crop of veterans who were battle scarred and worn, yet who came to college and made their presence a blessing to the College. Their records here are something for the books!

It's about time that these small time veterans wake up and start living. Living before the ax of reality falls on their necks.

The Daily Collegian

Successor to THE FREE LANCE, est. 1887

Published Tuesday through Saturday mornings inclusive during the College year by the staff of The Daily Collegian of The Pennsylvania State College.

Entered as second-class matter July 5, 1924, at the State College, Pa., Post Office under the act of March 3, 1879.

The Daily Collegian, and Graham's, too, finally appeared in the Daily Collegian (issue of April 18). Those "Coke" ads that have been featuring college newspapers and scenes in student hangouts around the country spirited a camera into the candy emporium and came up with a neat shot of pinball machines and magazines. The ad missed the essence of the muscular madhouse, however. There were no football players running through maneuvers.

Guests at Monday night's Sigma Delta Chi Gridiron Banquet enjoyed the show on the stage but they missed a better one in the dressing cubbyhole off stage.

About 17 members of the professional journalism fraternity stepped on, pushed, slugged, and assaulted each other for two and a half hours, changing costumes in a floor space 5 feet by 10 feet.

Ever hear about the graduating senior who was bragging about his new job. "I'll have more than 200 people under me," he said. "I'm going to mow lawns in a cemetery."

Much has been said about complicated newspaper proof symbols and the like, but it remained for Collegian sophomore boarder Pat Nutter to come up with the gem of the year.

Heading the galley proofs as they come off the linotypes are the initials of the linotype operators. This facilitates returning proofs for corrections.

The young lady in question was quite puzzled when "p 6" appeared at the top of the galley she was reading. Searching diligently among the other proofs for a similar notation, she finally resorted to asking one of the operators if he was p 6.

Whereupon the budding journalist was told that in this case it meant page six and the operator doubted if he was to be found in the shop.
