

Politics

The soap boxes are back in the moth balls, the big canvas "Vote Today" sign on the Mall is now back in the closet to await next year's fray and the students have elected next year's student government leaders.

Since Monday morning quarterbacking is the stock in trade of most interested parties, we shall partake of it. In our eyes, this week's election results—a sweep for the Lion party—can be laid to several different causes, perhaps none of which could carry the ball alone but taken together ascribe to the doctrine of "the whole is greater than its parts."

The "whole" in this case is a Lion sweep. The parts, which have gone to make it possible, were, from our interpretation:

1) THE FACT THAT THE Lion party boasted a one-man force in its top spot who was politically hard to beat. Well known already on campus, Bob Davis may have carried the entire Lion slate, with the possible exception of Harry Kondourajian, all-College vice-presidential candidate, who—because of similar campus prominence in government and otherwise, might have stood his ground alone. Together, they were that much harder to beat and their solidity was generated to the rest of the slate whether or not it needed the support. Davis' popularity was further indicated by the fact that some seemingly voted for him but split the rest of their vote between Lion and State.

2) The fact that the Lion party conducted by far the more thorough pre-election campaign in publications, radio and most other promotion phases. This was one of the most extensive we have viewed since being on campus.

3) The State party's noticable lack of solidity in backing its slate from top to bottom. Both parties were adorned with factions (that's politics!), but in the Lion case the faction eventually worked harmoniously; State men appeared divided from the first, and never did appear to shake off all the discord.

4) THE STATE PARTY'S lateness in bearing down contentiously on securing candidates, and on stirring wide-spread party and campus interest in the approaching campaign. The Lion preceded the State by at least a month in this.

These points may not be all the story, but we think they are the meat in explaining the Lion sweep.

 policy. The lowest policy offered is $500. Dividends on a larger policy—for example, a 20-year endowment policy of $10,000—would accrue faster and the College would receive the student gift of $100 faster.

(4.) In the event that the student would die before the policy reached maturity, his beneficiary would receive the full face value of the policy minus the portion of the $100 that had not yet been paid to the College.

Representatives of the Woods agency have stated that they expect to sell such policies to about 1,500 students each year, MacCallum said.

Committee Set Up

A committee to designate purposes, beyond the SU building, which the $100 student gifts shall be used will include: Samuel K. Hostetter, assistant to the president in charge of business and finance, chairman; Wilmer E. Kenworthy, assistant in charge of student affairs; George L. Donovan, manager of associated student activities; Ridge Riley, executive secretary of the Alumni Association; C. R. Barnes, executive accountant; the All-College president, vice-president and secretary-treasurer, and the senior class president.

The plan was presented earlier this year to Cabinet and was unanimously approved. On the insurance committee, headed by MacCallum, were Harry McMahon, All-College vice-presiappointed Charles Beatty and Robert Anderson to a Cabinet awards committee. The student government handbook will be completed by the end of May, Allen announced.

Earl Schaffer, Liberal Arts Council president, said yesterday that his contention that Dr. Lee Lorch's dismissal appears to be based on Dr. Lorch's activity in Stuyvesant Town, a New York housing project, stems from "investigation by me and by other members of the Council, and from an editorial in the New York Times." He said yesterday's Collegian stated erroneously that the contention stemmed from publicity initiated by the Progressive Party of Pennsylvania. Yesterday's Collegian read: "... Students in the Cabinet gallery upheld Schaffer's contention that Dr. Lorch's dismissal appears, through publicity initiated by the Progressive Party of Pennsylvania, to be based on Dr. Lorch's activities in opposing Negro discrimination in Stuyvesant Town, a New York housing project."

The topic of a student insurance program benefiting the College was first introduced to Cabinet by James Balog, senior class president.
