

A New Chief

Ever since the Board of Trustees at the College announced the selection of Dr. Milton Eisenhower as the College's eleventh president on January 21, students have awaited the arrival of July 1, when he would take over his duties.

July 1 came and went and Dr. Eisenhower moved quietly into his new job. Those who are attending the Main Summer Session, therefore become the first Penn State student body under his tenure. The balance of the students must wait until the fall semester to appraise the new chief.

The College has looked closely over the new president's qualifications and has not found them wanting. His background includes education, public affairs, and agriculture—certainly pertinent to such a balanced land-grant college as Penn State.

What does this mean to the College? It means the end of the uncertainty that has lain upon the College since the death of President Ralph Dorn Hetzel, nearly three years ago. Under the administration of James Millholland, the College grew. Post-war construction as well as an increase in enrollment were the highlights of Mr. Millholland's term as acting president. This was a job well done. However, a college without a real president is analogous to a large building without a firm foundation. The foundation has now been reinforced.

Penn State students had their initial glimpse of Dr. Eisenhower late in February, when 5,000 students, faculty members, and townspeople massed before Old Main to hear the new president speak briefly while on a short visit to the Nittany Valley. On that visit, Dr. Eisenhower impressed the student body with his friendliness, sincerity and good humor. Particularly, student leaders received the impression that Dr. Eisenhower's interest in student government would "do a lot to help the College advance."

The president's own statement that he would continue his "Open door" policy of being available often to see and talk to students, will go far in augmenting relationships between student and administration.

So, in this the first edition to be published under President Eisenhower's administration, the Collegian joins with the students, faculty, and townspeople in bidding a hearty and sincere welcome to Milton S. Eisenhower and his family.

Safety Valve . . .

FROM THE EDITOR: To students already familiar with the Daily Collegian, the "Safety Valve" needs no explanation. It is published for your benefit, and gives readers an opportunity to voice opinions, laud worthy efforts, or deplore others. In short, this column is for blown-off steam.

The Collegian will welcome contributions which gripe about its own shortcomings in conveying the news. However, "Safety Valve" is not merely a gripe outlet. Consistent fault-finders—offering no constructive suggestions—will be discouraged. Rather, "Safety Valve" should be considered as a College forum where differing opinions can be aired.

THIS IS YOUR COLUMN. Please be brief and sign your name and address. If so desired, Collegian will withhold the signature. However, for the protection of all, each letter will be checked for authenticity.

Collegian reserves the right to withhold from publication letters violating the codes of decency or good taste.

Your Program

A full and varied recreation program for the Main Summer Session will swing into high gear commencing today. As per usual, C. M. "Dutch" Sykes, of the College's intramural department has done a bang-up scheduling program of activities and entertainment for you, the summer student.

Square dancing, "Fun Nights," group singing, outdoor movies, softball competition, swimming, tennis, and golf are included in the Main Session slate of recreation.

The annual Main Summer Session reception will be held in White Hall beginning at 8:30 p.m., Friday, July 7.

This is always a favorite affair and a good attendance is expected to start the summer activities off on the right path. If possible, President and Mrs. Eisenhower will attend.

It's your program.
