Dr. John P. Jones Opens Workshop Lecture Series

Dr. John Paul Jones, pastor of the Federated Church of Dowagiac, Mich., opened the eleventh of a new church. annual Pennsylvania Workshop of a new church. lecture series on Sunday when he someday replace the public school charter was drawn up between system in the United States.

Speaking before approximately 200 students and visitors, Dr. Jones discussed the role of the School in aiding the community program of development and then traced his own experiences as a pastor in the Dowagiac Church in Michigan.

Jones," when the public school will be replaced by a civic center which will unite all branches of community. He including the community. community life including edu-cation and recreation. I believe

In most communities, Dr. Jones said, a program of central interests cannot yet be set up by the church because of lack of cooperation from sufficient crosssection of the community. In this case-without a strong community church-it is the logical job of the school to provide this prográm.

Introduced by Marion R. Trabue dean of the School of Education and Director of Summer Sessions, who in turn was introduced by the Workshop coordinator, Mary Jane Wyland, professor of education at the College, Dr. Jones pondered on the question of how to get the school to serve the community. He called on two biblical quotations to serve as a guide. "Love thy neigh-bor as thyself," and "Let him who would be great among you serve.

First developing his experience and ideas of a liberal religion in a men's church class in Flint, Mich.,—"where my pupils ranged from a group of self-appointed atheists to ultraradicals"—Dr. Jones told the shirt-sleeved audience of finding a church in Downging which a church in Dowagiac which combined a cross-section of community leadership with a wellorganized civic program.
