Music Rocks Carnegie; Band Tunes for Concert

By ED WALLACE

Trumpets blare, drums roll, and music fills Carnegie Hall. The casual student on his way to the golf or tennis court stops and listens and then goes on for an afternoon of fun.

Inside, a shirt-sleeved group of 75 known as the Summer Sessions Band continues practice.

Why do these students give up a trip to Whipples or an afternoon of golf? For two reasons. First because they enjoy music, and second because they are preparing for their big concert.

Traditional Concert

It's a tough grind, but the bandmen who form the Summer Sessions orchestra think it worth while. Their goal is to draw a capacity crowd at their annual summer concert at Schwab Auditorium Wednesday, Aug. 9.

Under the direction of James W. Dunlop, assistant professor of music education, the band practices two afternoons and one evening each week. In their half of the combined program, they will play music ranging from overtures to popular selections by Cole Porter.

Karhan to Direct

The first part of the program will feature the orchestra under the direction of T. K. Karhan, assistant professor of music and music education. Their selections will vary from the pre-classicist Bach to the late romantic Strauss.

Since that time, the runways have been improved and a power line, one of the main objections, was removed from the approach zone.

Westbound planes will arrive at State College at 2:07 p.m. and 4:58 p.m. Eastbound planes will arrive at 8:57 a.m., 12:05 p.m., and 5:12 p.m.

State College Considered For $11,000,000 Army Lab

State College is still under consideration for the building of a proposed $11,000,000 Army Quartermaster Laboratory, an authoritative spokesman declared Friday.

Announcement of the final decision is expected early in the fall after an impartial committee has studied all applications for the research project.

Final Action

Final action on the building may be postponed because of a reported presidential order halting prosecution of public buildings. This order however, is not expected to delay the choosing of a site.

The much publicized squabble among Boston, Philadelphia, and State College for the laboratory no longer exists, according to the spokesman. A good many other localities are still in the running.

Reports that the entire project might be dropped have been denied. The spokesman said that the laboratory would be built and that two years would be needed to complete the job.

A major drawback against State College's getting the project has been eliminated. The community's ability to handle an estimated influx of 2,000 persons was questioned, but now it appears that only 700 employees will be needed and some of these will come from this vicinity.
