

Artists Series

The Summer Artists Series, featured throughout the Main Session, has been a boon to those summer students who enjoy entertainment removed from the square dance-out-door-movie run of diversion.

LAST WEEK'S PROGRAM of piano classics presented by Anatole Kitain was well received by a crowd whose confidence in the Series had been shaken after the near-fiasco presented the week prior.

This week's program, the Eva Jessye Choir, promises to wind up the Series with a presentation designed to please those who appreciate top-notch choral singing.

JOHN MILLER, assistant director of the summer sessions, and director of the Artists Series, has done well in providing a program of entertainment that would be conspicuous in its absence at summer-time Penn State.

Air Service

State College is again on the map. The air map, that is. All-American Airways has announced that air service will be resumed after nearly five months discontinuance due to objectionable airport conditions. These conditions have recently been improved.

A TIME-WORN JOKE of students—not considered funny by residents, inaccessibility to State College has had a constricting influence on local merchants and a hurdle for visitors.

The town is an intermediate point on All-America's Pittsburgh-New York route and air service here is certainly desirable for both State College and Penn State.

Already, dividends are in sight, for air service resumption is expected to weigh heavily in the community's favor in deciding whether the proposed $11,000,000 Army Quartermaster Laboratory will be built in State College. Distance from the main railroad lines has been one detail working against the State College bid.

Penn State has developed a new and better mouse trap. This product from the realm of science scorns the conventional steel spring arrangement. Instead, ultra sonic sound deals the lethal blow. Now the College need only lean back and wait—for the world to beat a path to its door.

been appointed to supplement the work of the defense council. Chief of the Civil Air Patrol is Wayne Showers, State College. Capt. Maurice F. Kelly, Bellefonte, is the Army representative. Sones said that the defense system is being set up according to instructions sent out from the state organization and from information received at a conference at Indiantown Gap two weeks ago.

Division chiefs will appoint assistants to help them with their work. The type of work will be explained in detail later. Sones emphasized that there will be jobs open for a great many persons in the county.

Practical aspects of beekeeping will feature the annual short course for beekeepers to be held Aug. 21 to 25 at the College. E. J. Anderson, research apiarist at the College, who teaches the course, said actual work in bee yards will occupy half of each day to emphasize various management factors.
