President's Mansion Once Gave View of Countryside

Tucked away in an obscure corner of the campus, almost completely surrounded by squat ugly engineering units, stands the President's Home. Yet at the time it was built the site was selected because "our buildings should command the whole site of the College" and in 1862, when construction was started, it afforded a beautiful view of the surrounding countryside.

Evan Pugh, first President of the College, was responsible for the original structure when he agreed to pay $1000 of the $3000 needed to build a suitable residence. The house was built in the same style as Old Main, the so-called Italian Villa style current in this country at the time. But Pugh never lived to see its completion. He died on April 29, 1864, and construction was ended late in the same year.

Although substantial changes have been made in the structure since then, the building today, with its stately white columns, its landscaping, and its floral observatory, is essentially the same as the one first built in 1864.

With the ascendancy of Dr. Milton S. Eisenhower to the office of president, the 16-room mansion will have its tenth occupant. The dwelling has been the home of all the Presidents of the College since its construction.

President James Calder (1871-1880) established a vineyard and was responsible for the general layout of the grounds.

In 1895, President Atherton remodeled the home, which was greatly in need of repairs.

Since the advent of Prexy Ralph Dorn Hetzel in 1926, faculty receptions have been held in Old Main instead of the mansion because of the greatly increased size of the staff.

The last important changes in the President's Home were made in 1940, when the roof and porch were rebuilt to their present form, and the lily pond, cement foot bridge, and other small additions were added.

Groups Combine

One of the main features of the YWCA program was an annual play. In 1930 the YM and YW began to share many projects previously done separately. And in 1934 the two groups were combined and became the Penn State Christian Association.

Since 1943 the PSCA has had two executive secretaries. James T. Smith served from 1943 till 1948 when the present leader, Luther H. Harshbarger, assumed his duties.

In its 75 years of service to Penn State the PSCA has initiated and maintained many great and helpful programs and groups. It originated the Orientation week program, the Student Employment agency, the Housing service and spearheaded the International Relations club, the Community Forum series and the Courtship and Marriage institute.

Tries New Programs

In addition, the PSCA participates in the Religion-in-Life week program. It started and still sponsors the Washington D.C. and the United Nations seminars. At present it is experimenting with new programs to replace some of its more outdated ones.

The governing body of the PSCA is the Cabinet, elected each year. It determines the purpose, policy and program of the association. It is a student organization and is counselled by a board of directors, which is composed of faculty members, students, alumni, and others interested in the PSCA.

Besides Harshbarger as executive secretary, the association is directed by Marjorie Allen, associate secretary, and Margery Yugel, office secretary.

Yanks Favored -

Woodling. But Gene is the more accomplished fielder.

Center field—Here the Yanks have the edge. With the great Joe DiMaggio in center Richie Ashburn would have to perform miracles to top him. But, believe it or not, Rich did outhit Joe on the season, .303 to .301. Joe packs more power by far though, and was hitting .400 during the stretch run.

Right Field—Here the Kids' Del Ennis holds the lead. Del led the National League in runs batted in with 125 and hit .313 including 31 homers. But Hank Bauer of the Yanks is no slouch. Hank hit .321. Both are good fielders and both have powerful arms.

As a team the Yanks hit .282 to the Phils .265. The Bombers also led in fielding with a .981 average to the Phils .976.

On paper it appears that the Yanks have the decided advantage. But they don't play baseball on paper. If they did the Boston Red Sox would be meeting the Brooklyn Dodgers in this Fall's classic. And they're not.

Tribunal Meeting
