15,000 Witness Inauguration

Eisenhower Accepts Office . . .

President Receives Seal In Morning Ceremonies

Dr. Milton S. Eisenhower was installed as the 11th President of the College, in ceremonies witnessed by 15,000 persons on Beaver field yesterday morning.

The President, in accepting the charge of responsibilities from James Milholland, president of the Board of Trustees, said he accepted the responsibilities placed upon him and, "with that responsibility uppermost in my thoughts, thus formally become the 11th President of The Pennsylvania State College."

Following speeches by Robert Davis, All-College president, Prof. David Duncan, Dr. George Stoddard and Gov. James H. Duff, Milholland welcomed visiting delegates and

Duff And Duncan Hail Eisenhower

By MOYLAN MILLS

Governor James H. Duff, giving greetings from the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania to Milton S. Eisenhower as he was inaugurated yesterday as the eleventh president of the College, and David C. Duncan, professor of physics, who gave the new president greetings from the faculty, both said that President Eisenhower would lead Penn State into a very productive future.

Governor Duff said that, in a time such as this when leadership is needed more than ever, that Penn State "was enormously fortunate to have a president like Eisenhower to give the College that leadership."

Best Man For Job

He said that every Pennsylvanian was proud of Penn State, and he welcomed President Eisenhower on behalf of the people of the state. He said that it would have been impossible to have selected a better man for the job.

The governor said that the people were proud of the new president as well as the College and that they know he will match the highest qualities and lead Penn State on to a much better future.

Faculty Pledges Loyalty

Duncan pledged the undivided loyalty of the faculty to the new president. He said, "May we together go forward to our common goal—a still greater Penn State that is to be."

He said that the faculty was quite concerned about who the successor to Ralph Dorn Hetzel would be and that the faculty hoped the successor would be a strong president with much character, a person who would command respect, who would be a scholar, an educator, an administrator.

Sophs Schedule Morning Rally

A sophomore-inspired pep rally was scheduled for 6 o'clock this morning at the Corner Room to send the football team off to West Point. The team was slated to leave at 6:15 o'clock and the group planned to give it a cheering departure.

Plans for the rally were laid at an informal meeting of a group of sophomores Wednesday night. John Baron, last year's sophomore class vice-president, presided in the absence of president Joseph Arnold.

All-College president Robert Davis spoke briefly at the meeting, urging more class unity and spirit. This morning's rally was planned as a start toward attaining class spirit, Baron said.

thanked them for taking time "to join us on this historic occasion."

He said he was impressed with the diversity of talent needed for education, as represented before him, and even took a dig at State College weather. Quoting from Mark Hopkins ("the ideal school is a log, with a teacher at one end and a pupil at the other"), Milholland cheerfully stated that he couldn't see sitting on a log with a student in February in Centre county.

Milholland pointed up the past performance of President Eisenhower and stated that Presidency of the College calls for leadership of extraordinary power. He said he was confident of the "genius" of the new President.

He delivered the charge of responsibilities of the office, and President Eisenhower responded. The President then gave his inaugural address.

Pageantry Unveiled

Academic pomp and pageantry was unveiled in all its splendor at the ceremony.

At 10:35 a.m. the academic procession entered the field, led by a color guard of members of Scabard and Blade, senior military honor society, followed by the Blue band.

The line of delegates from colleges, universities, learned societies and educational associations from throughout the country were attired in the traditional academic costume of black mortar boards and gowns.

Admiral To Be Chapel Speaker

Rear Admiral Robert D. Workman, retired chief of naval chaplains, will speak at the regular College chapel services Sunday in Schwab auditorium at 11 a.m. His topic will be "Lift Up Your Eyes." Special music for the occasion will be presented by Thomas Lewis, tenor, and by George Ceiga at the chapel organ.

A native of Ohio, Admiral Workman spent a year at Penn State and graduated from the College of Wooster, Ohio. From there he went to graduate school at Princeton Theological seminary and after his graduation was honored with an honorary degree conferred on him by the College of Wooster.

In 1915 he was appointed a chaplain of the United States Navy and in 1937 became chief of chaplains. He retired from Navy service in 1945.

While in college, Admiral Workman was a member of Sigma Chi fraternity and is at present the scholarship counselor and spiritual adviser for the Sigma Chi foundation. Sunday evening at 7 o'clock he will speak to an informal group of fraternity and sorority representatives at the Sigma Chi house on campus.

Freedom Must Display Initiative, Says President

By GEORGE GLAZER

The concept of freedom must take the initiative all over the world and maintain it, President Milton S. Eisenhower said yesterday in his inaugural address.

Many persons today allow themselves to be put on the defensive and apologize for the fact that the "motive of profit is the foundation for our system of individual initiative and private enterprise," he said.

Tragic Errors

"There are two tragic errors in their reasoning," the president stated. "There never has been and never will be such a thing as a wholly socialized democracy. And, secondly, motivated by a purpose which the apologists call 'shoddy,' this nation has achieved, with seven per cent of the world's population, nearly 50 per cent of the world's production—thus lifting the economic level of the ordinary man above that of the political or industrial executives in many countries."

He said that instead of meriting criticism or apology, the American economic system should be acclaimed. If it were not for American economic strength at this moment, "freedom quickly would be absorbed by statism all over the earth," he said.

"It is this achievement of ours," he continued, "that the modern Tamerlane despises and seeks to destroy. He despises it in envy and would destroy it in fear—fear that his subjugated people will learn about it and turn upon him."

Guarantee of Peace

President Eisenhower said the greatest guarantee of peace and freedom in the world today is a strong United States—strong economically, socially, morally and militarily. Possessing such strength, the nation must put it into action, he declared.

The program of cooperating with all free nations "must include greatly expanded efforts to supplant all ignorance and suspicion with that genuine understanding on which essential cooperation may proceed," he said.

The president suggested that economic cooperation—not gifts, but the sharing of technical knowledge—be granted to give people the hope that their efforts may help them better their pres-

Stoddard, Davis Laud Eisenhower

By ROSEMARY DELAHANTY

George D. Stoddard, president of the University of Illinois and a graduate of Penn State, Class of 1920, and Robert M. Davis, All-College president, greeted Milton S. Eisenhower at his inauguration as the eleventh president of the College yesterday.

Stoddard told delegates, faculty members, and students present at the ceremonies that "Penn State needs Milton Eisenhower and Milton Eisenhower needs Penn State."

Speaking for the alumni of the College, Stoddard pointed out that Penn State needs the energy and ability of President Eisenhower, and that, in return, the College will give him more scope and a wider horizon for his activities.

Eisenhower is Choice

Stoddard continued, "It is easy to speak for tens of thousands of Penn State Alumni upon this occasion, for Milton Eisenhower is our choice, and to him we pledge our solid support."

The purpose of education, Stoddard said, is to give the student a living fund of knowledge and to promote straight thinking; if his education has been sound, the student will understand the democratic way of life.

Stoddard hoped that Penn State, along with other American universities, would promote such ideals and assume a position of national leadership.

Alumni College

Although he advocated the sentimental ties which bind the alumnus to the College, Stoddard suggested that contacts of another sort be made with graduates. He spoke in favor of alumni college, which would make use of extension and refresher courses, and which, he said, "I would rather have a million dollars for than for any other enterprise."

In addition to welcoming President Eisenhower on the part of the Alumni, Stoddard also brought greetings from the Uni-

President Named Honorary Head

President Milton S. Eisenhower has been named honorary chairman of the Campus Chest drive, Herbert Axford, chairman of the drive, announced yesterday.

The drive is scheduled for the week of Oct. 28 to Nov. 3 with a goal of $14,000. Campus chest is a combination of all the drives held on the campus in former years.

Chairmen have been named to head the three divisions of the drive. Marlin Brenner is chairman of the publicity committee, Joanne Esterly heads the solicitations group, and Otto Grupp is chairman of the special events committee.

The solicitations divisions has been subdivided into three sections. Nancy George is the head of the independent women's section, Richard Bard is the leader of the AIM division, and the IFC group is under the direction of Curt Wessner.

Organizations to be included in the drive are the Penn State Christian association, the Women's Student Government association, the World Student Service fund, the Scholargram program, the Tuberculosis fund, the March of Dimes, the Cancer fund, the Heart drive, the Salvation army, the Red Cross, and the State College Christmas fund.
