Shades Of Mother! Men Doing Washing

The sight of a big, footballish, tough he-man tenderly manipulating the folds of a rayon sport shirt, adjusting the temperature control on an iron, and proceeding to de-wrinkle the garment is something new in the hinterlands of the men's dormitories.

Domesticity has struck in full force, and previously unlearned students are striving mightily to catch up with the trend. With the advent of the new laundry rooms in the West dorms, topics of conversation are shifting in many quarters from the Philadelphia Eagles to the proper temperature at which to iron a handkerchief. Arguments as to whether a handkerchief is cotton or linen are everyday affairs, and the amount of soap to use with a load of socks is a subject for much heated debate.

To walk into a room and see a grizzled, hardened ME student tenderly rubbing a tee-shirt against his five-day beard to see if it (the tee-shirt) is dry enough is a bit of a shock. To see the same man delicately ironing the corners of a set of skivvies is downright revolting. The only thing missing is a frilly apron.

Nevertheless, the men are learning, and taking this new development in stride. The laundries are a good thing. They give poor mother a rest, and teach the male animal a few tricks that he may well have to know some day.
