

Advice To Women On Yuletide Giving

By PAUL POORMAN

In response to a flood of requests at our "Advice to the Lovelorn" desk, the society page today departs from its usual coverage of fraternity blanket parties, to offer some advice on Christmas giving. So if all you campus lovelies will just draw up a chair and make yourselves comfortable, Holiday Harry will dispense a few tips on what to give the male animal for the Yuletide donnybrook.

You'll find, girls, that a man's taste runs to the simpler things of life. Expensive gifts are seldom necessary to make the man in your life happy at Christmas. Most men don't want a girl to go out and spend a lot of money just for them. We he-males are contented with just a small remembrance from the one we love.

Give Cars

First on any girl's Christmas gift list should be a car. However, keep in mind that fancy cars are not necessary; the cheapest model of a convertible is usually acceptable. And remember, always buy with the idea of matching colors. If your one-and-only has blue eyes, a green car is most distasteful. Most men would prefer no car at all to one that does not match their wardrobe or complexion.

However, if even convertibles are slightly above your comprehension, the ever-suitable jewelry is available. Try, always, to keep your choices simple and inhibited. Diamond tie-clasps and ruby cufflinks are old favorites and always nice, or you could give him a good wristwatch. A simple, gold plated, 17 jewel is fine for most casual occasions.

Next, of course, you can always give clothing. Men like to get little gifts of neat wearing apparel, and are always ready to welcome with open arms even the simplest Alpagora topcoat, or inexpensive Tartan plaid sport affair. Neckties are nice, too, if you get the cheaper, handpainted jobs available at most moderate haberdashers.

So that's it for today, girls. We hope these suggestions will prove helpful, and we know the boys will like any one of the above-mentioned articles. Above all, remember, keep your tastes simple, and don't go beyond your means.

For additional information regarding what to give your man for Christmas, write the "Advice to the Lovelorn Column" in care of this paper.
