

Communism Is Termed 'Decivilization' By Pyun

By JOAN KUNTZ

Pyun Yung Tai, former professor at the University of Korea, termed Communism a "decivilization" in his description of the present Korean situation at the Westminster foundation Wednesday night.

Movies of the destruction of Seoul, capital city of South Korea, were shown preceding Pyun's lecture. He said that 25 per cent of the city was completely destroyed. All the modern buildings of importance were in that sector, Pyun added.

Having left Korea only five weeks ago, Pyun said that no sensible Korean objects to the UN intervention because they realize Korea will be free only if the world is free. So they are willing to put up with the destruction going on in their country, he said. But, he added, if the UN should pull out, their attitude would be one of shock for they can't believe the possibility of such an event.

Communism A Disease

Pyun said that he does his bit to try to improve the parts of his government which he doesn't approve of, but that he could never do this under any Communist rule. "Communism is like a disease. It's something you can't wish away," Pyun stated. Therefore, he claims that the Koreans need outside help. He said, that to win Communism is a decivilization, anti-cultural, anti-religious, anti-everything.

In answer to the question "Why do the Communists want South Korea," Pyun said that to the Russians it would be of paramount strategic importance as a watchtower over China. The Russians want that huge Chinese population behind them, he said.

"After the hellish experience I've had, it's consoling to find freedom and joy of life in this country," said Pyun. "To be able to live yourself, and let others live is really something we must fight for," he emphasized.

Pyun, who was recipient of a grant-in-aid under the State Department's program for exchange of persons, is now vice-president of the Korean Red Cross. Pyun has conferred with Washington officials and now plans to visit American colleges to study the American public school system.

The small-featured Korean was educated in China, has written four books, has taught in the University of Korea, and was recently active director of the Red Cross there.

Science Annex To Be Added

The General State authority yesterday approved construction of a $950,000 addition to the new Mineral Sciences building at the College.

The addition was requested, the authority said, by President Milton S. Eisenhower, who told the agency the building is needed to permit research into the uses of sub-marginal mineral resources and the study of industrial non-metallic minerals.

The additional space will provide for lectures, laboratory experimentation, research, and the treatment of minerals.

As a result of increased construction costs, the request said, the present building lacks facilities for special research in coals, clays, and other sub-marginal minerals found in the state.

'Farmer' Copies Now Available

The November Penn State Farmer is available in 3 Agriculture building, the mailing room in the basement, to those students who did not receive their copies.

Lacking the correct addresses of all the subscribers, Carl Gerhart, circulation manager, said a new circulation system will be attempted with the December issue. Copies for the students will be placed in each lobby of the agricultural buildings.

Subscriptions by faculty members will go through the mails. Because a limited number of "Farmers" are available, faculty are requested to refrain from taking copies in the lobbies.

The December issue of the Farmer will not be ready until Jan. 3.
