

Sleek Silhouette Stays Say Fashion Experts

By BETTY LOUX

Sulphur and molasses may be one remedy for those midwinter blues, but a happier tonic for the college girl is the planning of her spring wardrobe.

February issues of leading fashion magazines are featuring many Paris-inspired styles. The silhouette is still a sleek one. Variation on the basic sheath line have been artfully achieved by details such as the jutting tunic, scarf-stole or low-placed hem-line pleats. The trumpet silhouette is the distinguished exponent of the slim line that bursts into low, flared fullness at the hemline.

In keeping with this basic silhouette, the newest suit is a form-fitting wool sheath dress with a waist-length jacket, boxy or flared. The dress is cut like a jumper and may be worn singly or with a blouse. Likewise, the jacket is doubly useful as a top for other skirts.

Long Jacket
A new twist to the classic suit is the long fitted jacket with an oblique closing. This line helps to create a curved look, which is also carried out in the padded hipline and slanted pockets.

Spring just wouldn't seem natural without an influx of sparkling prints, and this season is no exception. Variety is the keynote—from dainty miniatures to precise geometrics, oversized florals and gaudy Roman stripes. Fabrics are all-important—luxurious silks are available as well as the sheerest nylons; linen seems to be coming into its own again.

Mangone Topper
The Mangone-inspired topper is rapidly becoming as perennial as Easter itself because of the ease with which it goes over suits and slim dresses. Full-length coats are shaped and fitted or shaped and flowing loosely in the pyramid line.

It's a toss-up as to whether gray can ever be replaced as one of the best basic colors, but it's getting plenty of competition from postman's blue, a soft, medium shade which seems to enhance every complexion and hair shade. A sweep of brilliant purple for suits and toppers or just a touch at the throat spells fashion this season; the new accessory color for spring is a flash of vivid orange-brown—striking when worn with navy, gray, brown or black. A high note of white and a soft touch of beige complete the harmony.

with George

How do you like that! A guy can't drink a cup of coffee without losing his girl.

How was my roomy Orval to know his girl was in the next booth. He was exclaiming, "George, you should see her! Saw her last night for the first time, and what lines! And man does she hug..."

Just then we felt the deep freeze as his girl icicles her way past our booth. She'll probably never believe Orval was raving over the new Buick.

She'll love you for these

But you can bet your last week's meal ticket she'll thaw when she sees the pearl earrings Orval bought at Ethel's for Valentine's Day. Why, a Who's Who oyster couldn't tell one of these from one of its very own.

Yes sir, Jack, if you want her heart to palpitate for you, give her pearls from Ethel's.

There's nothing like them next to mink. Or around her neck. And these heart warmers won't cost you this semester's allowance either. An earring can be had for only fifty cents. (You'll want two.) Enuf pearls to make her stoop shouldered are yours for less than five.

Ethel has them by the yard

The nice thing about pearls is that they go with anything... sweater, blouse, suit, evening gown. They're what you might call the "basis" accessory. Call them what you will, but get them at Ethel's. Selection at any price is unlimited. And prices are right. Compare. For a sampling, look in the small window outside.

Valentine Suggestions: a bushel or a peck

If you gave her pearls for Christmas, don't be down-hearted. Ethel has a couple of hundred other gifts that will start her knitting you argyles. For example, Ethel offers handsome leather, metal, and wood frames to frame your picture from postage stamp to mural size. For her desk, purse, wall. Or locket.

There's a lipstick size perfume atomizer at $3. Key caddy for $1. Rolf, and King wallets from $3.50. Evening bags for $5. Gay stuffed animals to brighten her room, and spirits for $1.50 up.

For a place in her heart, stop in at Ethel's, in the heart of State College. Ouch!
