

Infatuation Or Merely Love? Experts Solve The Problem

By PAUL POORMAN

Since the appearance some time ago of his Christmas column on advice to women on Yuletide gifts, Holiday Harry has been in relative obscurity. In fact, he went into a sort of forced exile. But times have changed, and our boy Harry bounds back today with a simple treatise on a subject of world-wide, or at least campus-wide, importance. Today, we consider love!

In the March issue of McCall's magazine, Joe McCarthy tells of the findings of an outstanding psychologist after conducting a research on the problem. McCarthy reports the results and gives the reader a set of symptoms of each respective state of emotions to use as a guidepost in answering the all-important question, "How do I know I'm in love?"

In McCarthy's words, "The survey concluded, among other things, that probably the most practical way of answering the question 'How do I know I'm in love?' is to turn it around and ask yourself 'How do I know this is not simply infatuation?'"

The article goes on to give the two "quick checklists" by which any of you readers can tell in a moment if he or she is the real thing:

"If you feel this way, it's probably infatuation:

"Guilty about your feeling for him.

"Anxious about your family's or friends' opinion of him.

"Envious or angry when he is the life of the party.

"Preoccupied and dreamy and withdrawn from reality.

"More attracted to him sexually than any other way.

"Bored when there is no sexual excitement or social amusement.

"If you feel like this, it's probably love:

"Unselfish and ready to make sacrifices for him.

"Independent of your family's opinion of him, whether favorable or unfavorable.

"Unable to bear a grudge after a quarrel.

"Even more affectionate when he is in trouble.

"Your life is incomplete without him.

"Never bored when you're with him."

So goes the story in the magazine. As you can see, the above list is aimed mainly at the female population of any given area, but by the simple expedient of reversing the pronouns, you males on campus can tell just how you stand, too.

Read the list, and if the answers don't check right, hold on to that pin for a while! The right one is just around the corner.

Senior Women To Be Honored At Breakfast

A breakfast to honor worthy senior women will be given soon by Mortar Board, senior women's honorary. Senior women who have been active in working for the College, but who have received no honors will be invited to the affair.

The girls will be tapped by Mortar Board some weekday morning to tell them of the breakfast. The date of the affair, which is built around a Pennsylvania Dutch theme, will be announced at the same time the tappees names appear.

A letter is being sent to organizations requesting the names of those senior women who have worked for the group diligently, but have received no reward. Other qualifications for the honor are that the girl must not be a member of Cwens, Chimes, or Mortar Board, and that she be a seventh or eighth semester student.

Committee members of the breakfast are Audrey Brua and Mary Ellen Grube, entertainment; Gay Brunner and Rose Eifert, decorations; Barbara Sprengle, food; and Bettina de Palma, publicity.

WSGA Names Frosh Council

Names of newly-elected representatives to Freshman council were announced at the WSGA senate meeting Wednesday night.

Those women elected are the new freshman dormitory officers: Mary Pettigout, president of Atherton; Joy Schiller, vice-president of Atherton; Patricia Prichard, secretary of Atherton; Mary Kazelnicky, secretary of McAllister; Barbara Jones, vice-president of Women's building; and Jane Reber, town senator.

The senate appointed Patricia Bender and Catherine Corbiere to the Pan-American day committee.

with George

Rushing out of a hash house for a 1 o'clock last week, I grabbed my hat and found a head already in it. Belonged to an advertising major. Under the circumstances, conversation seemed to be in order. So I ask him, "Read any good textbooks lately?" He had. About institutional advertising.

Seems the idea of institutional advertising is to sell the store as a whole. So I ask Ethel, "How would you like to sell your store as a hole?" I caught the bean pot she threw at me.

Go West . . . Bend

Which, by the way, is one of those wonderful West Bend products that pampers the lowly vegetable into the most succulent morsel that ever rolled off a fork. With steak prices becoming rare, the bean is being rediscovered. (At least by people lucky enuf to simmer it in a West Bend.) Which makes this item at $6.95 a fine gift for the newlywed, mom, or aunt Effie. It supplies its own heat. West Bend also makes aluminum corn poppers, ice buckets . . . and an automatic perculator which costs about a third the price of most I see advertised. A modest $10.95 considering it does everything but drink the coffee for you.

Thank you, mam

Or maybe you want to thank your roommate's mother for a weekend at home. This is where the House of Herbs comes to your rescue. Gay little jars of vinegars, sauces, seasoning, and herbs that make the most humdrum dish exciting. You can choose your own price by selecting one or as many jars as you wish. 35 cents will purchase one.

How's your taste, bud?

And would you believe it. Ethel sells candy. But not the kind you've tasted in this world. She offered me a piece of Almond Rocca after I explained I meant "whole". First I just admired the wrapping. And then I tasted. Now I know why Almond Rocca is the most delicious candy in State College. And I should know because I come from State College. (Pardon me while I wipe the drool off this copy paper.) In fact, excuse me while I dash down to Ethel's for another box of Almond Rocca. Price $1.85.
