Consider Revisions Of Women's Rules

There is at least one college in the nation which permits women students freedom more or less equivalent to that of the average male student. Such a system hardly would be appropriate for Penn State where thousands are living in one relatively small area. But a periodic inspection of the official attitude toward social regulation of coeds would seem a sensible and alert policy, and a necessary part of a progressive educational system.

AS UNFORTUNATE INCIDENTS at colleges often have illustrated, some regulation of at least one of the sexes is a necessity. As it generally turns out, it is the woman who is regulated.

Once rules are set and once they are instilled in those whom they concern, they often are ignored. As conditions change, some of the rules become dead wood and others are outdated. Considering this, periodic inspection of coed regulations would seem a worthwhile project. Certainly radical changes need not be made. We don't advocate that.

But fresh, alive approaches to such a problem will not develop until students and administrators, and those groups among themselves, get together and figure where they stand now in this phase of education and where they want to and where they can venture in developing greater freedom, greater self-reliance, and a greater sense of social responsibility in the individual woman student.

PROGRESSIVE EDUCATORS would, we think, want to strip women's regulations to a minimum, permitting coeds as much social freedom as is possible without abolishing opportunities for giving guidance when it is needed.

Understanding

A small crowd in Schwab auditorium recently saw six films on life in India, presented in connection with the observance of India week. The films did not deal with weighty problems but rather with music, dances, and art of that Far East country. They were valuable in that they provided a means of better understanding the ways of a people with whom Americans are fairly unfamiliar.

It is unfortunate that so few people attended. True, the program was scheduled for a busy College night. But this idea of "better understanding" is important to us all. Its importance has been demonstrated in our dealings with Russia and China, with our Western allies, and, incidentally, with India over the Korean war.

Campus events of this nature should not readily be passed by. Understanding such as they may provide is valuable to us in our thinking on world events and in our relations, as a group and individually, with other peoples.

College's Track Meet Scheduling

TO THE EDITOR: Penn State has no home track meets this spring. Once again the students have been let down. Two years ago there were two home meets; last year there was one; and now the team's most interested audience is completely ignored. The same students who, for as long as memory serves, have been rabid track fans.

True, there are two home meets scheduled—one with Michigan State that has been canceled, and a triangular meet with Pitt and West Virginia, transferred to Pittsburgh. Incidentally, the date of that meet is May 19—Saturday of Senior prom week-end!

Delving further you find that State has only one other dual meet scheduled plus the Penn relays and IC4-A events. Only a few top men will engage in these later meets. This provides a ridiculous comparison to any other sports schedule. Certainly an attractive winter track program was engaged in (all away, of course), although once again there were only two dual meets.

Now with due credit to the Freebairns, Herbs, and Ashenfelters, isn't it about time that the literally dozens of other capable fellows be given more of a chance to compete? At least in front of their ever loving and ever paying fellow students.

The idea of preferring not to run at all to running against mediocre opposition may be a good idea but only from the coaches' standpoint. Besides even at this late date a couple of meets could probably be scheduled with such top teams as Army, Cornell, NYU, Syracuse, Yale, Morgan

State, Seton Hall, Villanova, or Penn.

Every effort should be made to schedule these teams lest we, in our quest for record breaking champions, lose sight of the fact that sports are still fundamentally to provide the greatest amount of enjoyment to the largest number of participants.

—Name Withheld

Ed. Note—The Michigan State meet had to be canceled so that the Spartans could live up to their Big Ten commitments, according to Harold R. Gilbert, graduate manager of athletics. This year's meet with Pitt and West Virginia originally was scheduled there, he said. Further, two home meets were scheduled for last year, but one had to be transferred to Pitt when the track caved in. Gilbert also said that full teams will compete in the two dual meets, the Penn Relays and the IC4-A's.

Gilbert said that every effort has been made to schedule a home meet for May 12, but to no avail. As a matter of fact, Villanova and Seton Hall meet each other on the same day.

J. Paul Sheedy* Switched to Wildroot Cream-Oil Because He Flunked The Finger-Nail Test

POOR Paul was having a fowl time because his down was up. All the chicks made wise quacks about his upswept hairdo until his shellmate suggested he duck over to the drugstore. "Waddle I do?" he asked. "Get Wildroot Cream-Oil!" the druggist answered. "Non-alcoholic. Made with soothing lanolin. Grooms your hair neatly and naturally without that plastered-down look. Removes ugly ducklings—I mean ugly dandruff! Helps pass the fingernail test!" Now he's engaged—he's lovely—he uses ponds—to swim in! (Isn't he decoy one?) So water you waiting for? Get a tube or bottle of Wildroot Cream-Oil Hair Tonic at any drug or toilet goods counter today. Ask your barber for professional applications. And tell all your webfooted friends it's eggactly what the ducktor ordered!
