Passionate Pageant Of Spinning Specimens

Next time you're at a campus dance of some kind, take a few minutes off from gazing deep into your partner's doubtless soulful eyes and just look at the other people. You'll find it's funnier than Fulton Lewis (Jr.).

Over there, beyond the bandstand, for instance. No, the other couple. See, the pair with all the legs. Get the guy's face, with the elastic look. His lips are sagging with passion; his eyes are faintly crossed. This is The Woman; he has just decided this after a careful examination of her brilliant mind and deep, deep neckline. His head droops faintly, his brows are puckered and there's a faint streak of saliva on his chin. He is one half of a perfect couple.

But then give a second to the woman. She is dancing on tiptoe, not to be nearer him, but so she can look over his shoulder and scan the field. Greener pastures beckon from the stag line and she is using everything from a come-hither cast in the mascara to body English to catch the eye of the shoulders in tartan plaid. The shoulders don't seem to be taking the hint and she figures maybe they're too far away—a good five feet—and so she starts edging her escort closer to the stags.

THIS IS A PLAY whose ending we can foresee already, so we look at another couple. Get a load of Mutt and Jeff over there. They are gazing into each other's eyes and to do it, they've got their heads at right angles to their bodies. He looks like a loving dental mirror, she an amorous goose-neck lamp. She sort of slopes away from him like a triangular brace, and the pair give the general effect of a tangoing bridge girder.

A little bit apart from the crowd is a study in facial happiness. On the boy, an idiotic grin; on the girl, a knowing smile. A pin will change sweaters tonight.

The music goes soft and slinky and the tricky stuff starts. A couple goes by with the boy enveloping the girl like the wrappings clinging to a mummy. There's a he-she team in which, if they were any closer, she'd be wearing the oxfords. The tall, wrinkled guy with the military hair must be an engineer, because that last slide broke the rule. It was while watching dancing like this that the Englishman turned to his American guide and said, "They do get married afterwards, don't they?"

THE GIRL IN THE DRESS that still isn't all paid for has an if-this-big-bum-sets-just-one-more-of-his-fifteen-feet-on-my-instep-I'm-going-to-give-him-a-knee set to her chin. A dreamy expression replaces this, and she is thinking exactly what she is going to say about this animal to her girlfriends and her girl-friends' girlfriends and the girls in the sorority across the hall and the girls in Grange and . . . she winces; he has done it again, and the cycle begins once more.

Believes Dorm Council Did Not Know Facts

TO THE EDITOR: In reference to Saturday's Collegian editorial concerning West dorm council, it is my personal opinion that the council acted in ignorance of the facts ("Yet, the council acted either in ignorance of these facts, or ignoring them."—Collegian) which were not presented completely by

Wes Tomlinson (who presented the original motion for withdrawal of council funds from the AIM treasury). Had he stated that the AIM had funds, but were merely temporarily inaccessible because of the division taking place between IFC and AIM, I am sure that this would have made a great difference.

In the future, it would be wise for the West dorm council to ask for complete as well as accurate information before taking any action. This, I am sure, would eliminate any "brash" action.

You Name It—

One of the cast pried open a glass door and nearly snatched a piece of chocolate cake left on one of the tables until the manager swooped down, culture-like, to protect his board.

Props from beer bottles to baby carriages were handled by Marv Krasnansky, though nearly everyone had a hand in the collection. At 4 o'clock that afternoon someone shouted at me, "Go downtown and buy a diaper." "A diaper?" I asked rather stupidly. "Don't ask questions, get moving," someone said.

I THEN LEARNED THAT it is impossible to purchase one diaper in State College. You have to buy them in lots of six or 12. "But what if you have only one baby?" I asked the saleslady. "You'll need more than one," she answered sweetly. I settled for a pair of baby pants. You can buy one of those.

Ethics of gridiron dinners forbid quoting of the sallies either in the skits or in the rebuttal which was, in this instance, made by President Eisenhower. The President evidently did a thorough research job on the members of Sigma Delta Chi, producers of the show, for he was well armed with barbs that made us wish he hadn't been allowed the last word. I suspect he employs a few hawk-nosed hawkshaws on that huge administrative staff.

TWO MOTION PICTURE COMEDIES in town this week are excellent examples of the difference between foreign and domestic movies. "Father's Little Dividend," an American product with Spencer Tracy, is a harmlessly amusing series of facial expressions that you've seen and laughed at before. It's like cotton candy—the first taste is delightful, but after a while you realize you're eating nothing.

"Kind Hearts and Coronets," with Alec Guinness, is an English film which is not only thoroughly funny, but also has enough depth and subtlety to keep you laughing for weeks.

HAVING BEEN ACCUSED of debasing the committee system and of being cynical in the past week, I am perhaps sticking my neck out again in quoting the following passage from the minutes of the last meeting of the College senate:

"Mr. Morse announced that President Eisenhower had appointed M. E. John, chairman, R. G. Bernreuter, W. L. Morgan, Ben Euwema, and H. K. Schilling to serve on a committee to study the purpose for which the senate was originally organized."

You'd think they would know by this time.
