

Study Made By Educators

Two educators, representing the Co-operative Project in Education, visited the College this week to make a study of its offering in this field, according to Dr. O. H. Aurand, professor of education.

The visitors were Dr. John K. Norton, director of the Department of School Administration at Teachers' College, Columbia University, and chairman of the Educational Policies Commission; and J. Arthur Jarman, professor of educational administration at the University of Virginia.

The project is sponsored by the Kellogg Foundation, which has made an initial contribution of $3,000,000 to study the training of school administrators. This project is nation-wide and operates through seven college centers in various parts of the country.

Penn State is one of the co-operating schools associated with Columbia University in the work. A five-year program of improvement is contemplated.

Cecil Brown--

that Communist China is now the dominant military power in Asia.

Brown summed up American foreign policy in Asia as a "constant effort to keep Asia non-Communist with minimum effort and money."

America's most serious mistake in Asia, he said, was a "prayerful hope in 1945 that the Russians would show interest in peace and decent behavior." We need have no remorse that we tried, he said, but there was inefficiency and incompetency in everything we tried in Asia.

Poses Question

"Did the American people want to save China from the Communists?" he asked. "Or rather, did they want to pay the price?"

He said he did not think the U. S. wanted to set up a Marshall Plan of recovery in Asia like that in Europe. "Were we ready to send troops to China to intercede in the Chinese civil war two years ago and risk intervention of Russian troops? No." Because this nation wouldn't risk manpower or financial support, he said, it could not save China from the Communists.

Brown criticized American support of Yugoslavia's Tito, saying we are making Communism respectable. "Tito is a ruthless dictator, and a devoted Communist," he said. "We are helping a Communist dictatorship succeed; all too soon we'll be sending guns to Yugoslavia in addition to economic support."

The College owns 93 buildings on the main campus. Total worth of the entire College plant is $40,010,500.

Auto Engineers Plan Altoona Field Trip

The Society of Automotive Engineers is planning a field trip to the Pennsylvania Railroad test department at Altoona Tuesday.

Students who wish to make the trip will meet at the Mechanical Engineering laboratory parking lot at 12:30 p.m. They will be given excuses for classes missed. Transportation will be provided.

Additional information can be obtained by calling State College 2692 or 2744.

Control of the College is vested in a 32-member Board of Trustees.

West Dorm Council Sponsors Dance Tonight

Darrell Rishel's orchestra will play for an informal dance, sponsored by the West Dorm Council, in the West Dorm lounge tonight from 9 to 12.

The dance will be an All-College affair, and admission will be free.

Correction

It was erroneously reported in yesterday's Collegian that 28 per cent of the Chem-Phys School voted in school council elections. Instead, 38 per cent of the school voted. Out of 445 eligible voters, 170 cast ballots.
