

Spread Data, Boost Food Quota—Lining

Efficient dissemination of information on better methods in agriculture can greatly increase food production in many countries of the world, Dr. F. F. Lining, director of the agricultural experiment station said yesterday.

Dr. Lining will become chief of the Agricultural Institutions and Services branch, Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations on July 1. His headquarters will be in Rome. He has been granted a leave of absence for the duration of the assignment.

Helps Backward Regions

Under informed leadership, Dr. Lining sees increased agricultural production in the world's backward regions. This must come with advances in commerce and industry to reduce poverty and hunger, he said. Such a reduction will cut down interest in Communism, he said.

Dr. Lining will head the branch that will be in charge of dissemination of agricultural knowledge from the scientist to the farmer in any of the 66 FAO nations seeking agricultural aid.

Improvement Slow

Improvement will probably be slow and will require advances in several fields, he said. Some nations with low agricultural production have conducted valuable research, although their knowledge has not been put into use by the farmer.

The present agricultural extension system in the United States is an effective way in which the farmer may gain the help of experts and their findings.

Use Exchange System

Dr. Lining also favors the adoption by institutions in this country of a sister college in each country seeking aid. Both institutions could benefit from the exchange system. Penn State has been carrying on such exchanges with Lingnan University in Canton since 1907.

"This system of having one nation share its experiences and knowledge... can be an important step in bringing about a better understanding among nations and will be a great step toward world peace," Dr. Lining said.

Nation-Wide Plan Studied By Profs

Dr. Hugh M. Davison, professor of educational research at the College, and Dr. William M. Arnold of the University of Pennsylvania comprised a team which recently studied the program for training school administrators at Syracuse University.

Dr. Franklin A. Miller, associate professor of education at the College, visited the University of North Carolina on a similar project.

The study is part of a nationwide project sponsored by the Kellogg Foundation.

'Old Faithful'--

It happened that a passing motorist, who was driving a convertible-type automobile, tried to steer clear of the spray that was coming from the local version of "Old Faithful."

Much to his dismay, however, another car passed him as he was about to avoid the spray. This sudden turn of events caused him to pass directly through the spray.

Oh, well, as the saying goes, that's the way the ol' ball bounces.

prize, the hatmen and frosh had a tug-of-war contest. Fifteen hundred watched the hatmen, sparked by Homer Barr and Don Carlson, pull the freshman team through a spray of water. The frosh thereby lost and the period of no-dating continued.

Homecoming Weekend

Ten thousand alumni returned for homecoming weekend. The Blue Band honored the alums and Pennsylvania Week during the half. An added feature was five coed cheerleaders, the first since 1948.

The homecoming game ended in a tie—Temple 7, State 7.

Beta Sigma Rho fraternity won the prize for the best lawn decoration. Their "Prize Package of the New Year" was a large lion dressed as a clown with lighted eyes blinking off and on. Beside him was a box with figures of the Prexy and football coach Rip Engle in it.

The soccer team beat Colgate and showed a 20-game winning streak.

Alumni--

the only active alumni mailing list is maintained by the Alumni Office.

"The College and her alumni depend upon each other," Riley said, "and since the College has become an integral part of our lives, as alumni it would still pay us to keep informed of what Penn State does in our own technical and professional fields as well as keep in touch with our classmates through alumni facilities."

Urges Students To Join

In a letter being sent to all graduating seniors, President Milton S. Eisenhower urged the students to become Alumni Association members and said, "The alumni are the real interpreters of the College to the people of the commonwealth and of the nation. It is essential, therefore, to the continued growth and welfare of Penn State that every alumnus maintain a bond with the College, and that he be interested and active as a Penn State alumnus."

Subscription blanks for joining the association are being sent to all graduating seniors, and will appear in tomorrow's Collegian.

POLING TO RUN

PHILADELPHIA, May 21 (AP)—Dr. Daniel A. Poling, 66, prominent international Protestant church leader, today announced his candidacy for the Philadelphia mayoralty nomination.
