You Too Can Learn to Talk Like a Typical College Student

By GEORGE GLAZER

You are now a college student. You are expected to look, act and talk like a college student the very first time you get home.

In order that you may fulfill at least one part of this nasty triumvirate, The Daily Collegian, as one of its many public services, has compiled a list of words and phrases that is unconditionally guaranteed to make you sound like Joe or Josephine College, depending upon your preference.

To wit:

Mall—something all male students try to do to all Penn State coeds. This, like many things, is frowned upon by the dean of women.

Shaft (usually preceded by the adjective purple)—something you can do without. Usually administered by a female to a male with whom she is going. Usually occurs when her boy friend back home finds out she is dating someone else. May be used like this: "He was shafted." "He got the shaft." Naturally, you're always talking about someone else.

Bars—something which you'll be behind if you're caught at (if you're under 21).

Draft—something you should stay out of because you get cold (feet).

Froth—obscene, lewd, lascivious magazine? Edited by illiterates. You'll hear more from us about this later.

Hot Dog or Sandwich hour—an example is easiest. You get up for an 8 o'clock class, and from 9 till 4 have no other classes. They are called sandwich hours. Pack a lunch.

IFC checkers—men who leave their own rooms to make sure no other fraternity houses have any women in upstairs rooms.

Classes—something which, like the aforementioned shaft, you can do without.

Hostesses—watchdogs of that great American legend, virtue.

Juked—when you've had the shaft administered, then you can say you've been juked.

You've had it—see juked.
Beer—dirty word. The first time this word has appeared in the Daily Collegian in 72 years.

One o'clock on a week-end night in the women's dorms—now it can be told; this is where Dr. Kinsey found it all out.

Coeds—les miserables.
Imports—your best bet on a houseparty week-end.

Houseparty—a bacchanal.
Campus patrol—our answer to the Keystone Kops.

Cram (from the 1951 Student Handbook)—mathematical term, denoting the impossibility of dividing 12 weeks work by one evening and six benzedrine tablets.

Ag Hill—the place your next class is when you're at the other end of the campus.

Campused—a girl does something she shouldn't have, so now they won't let her do it anymore.

Mixer—rat race where everybody tries to make out.

Make out—like getting rich. Everybody tries to do it but few succeed.

Thus ends the first installment of "Collegese, In Numerous Easy Lessons." This should be sufficient to tide you over on your first trip home. After that, there'll be another installment.

me again. In lieu of that time, however, may I recommend for your reading enjoyment any one or all of the following: George Glazer—would-be columnist with a yen for the filthy; Ron Bonn—Collegian's sex editor, or sometimes called Collegian's sexless editor; Marv Krasnansky—self-styled genius of the keyboard, who brings you revelations on world events that are startling, to say the least; Len Kolasinski—"Fundamental Issues" are brought into clear focus by this critical world analyst. All these contemporaries of mine will be appearing in print in the near future, even if they have to fall into the press to do it.

BX Sells Books At Low Prices

The Penn State Book Exchange, commonly called the BX, was established on campus three years ago for the purpose of providing books and other school supplies to the students at prices as low as possible.

However, it was not until 1949 that the student cooperative was recognized as a permanent campus institution by the College Board of Trustees. Originally the BX had been set up on a provisional basis until it could prove its worth to the student body.

Located in TUB

The BX, located in the rear of the Temporary Union Building, is completely managed and operated by students for the benefit of the student body. It is a non-profit organization. Receipts are given out with all purchases. At some announced time, usually near the end of the semester, these are redeemable with a 20 percent rebate given to students.

With the organization working on a non-profit basis and the money saved by means of the rebates, students can realize large savings in the purchase of supplies.

The Used Book Agency, formerly a separate organization, now functions as part of the BX. Here students may bring used books which they wish to sell and may also purchase used books. Anyone may take used books to the exchange and place their own selling prices on them.

60 Per Cent Of Cost

These books are then sold through the BX. The usual price asked is about 60 per cent of the original value of the book.

The BX is open daily during the semester to enable students to purchase supplies.

The organization is run by students appointed by All-College Cabinet. Those responsible for the BX this year are Milton Bernstein, chairman of the board of control; Robert Spragg, secretary, chairman of the Used Book Agency; Jay Headley, treasurer; Joseph Haines, personnel director; Clair George, purchasing agent; and Frank Kelley, advertising director.

The Rockefeller Foundation has made a grant of $20,000 to the College to support a three-year program of biophysical research that will be directed by Dr. Raymond Pepinsky, research professor of physics.
