 we turned to the actual mechanics of his work, and found out several interesting things. Mahlon comes on the job at 6 p.m., and quits at midnight. His task involves the sprinkling of six greens a night, rotated every night so that each portion of the course gets watered about twice a week. The sprinklers must be shifted about on the green to insure the rough soaking of all parts, and this too is done six times. Earlier in the season, the tees also were sprinkled, being watered all night and rescued in the morning. But nights are long since summer went away, and too much aqua pura would seep in the interim so he now foregoes the tees.

We don't know whether you've ever seen the golf course at night or not. As a matter of fact, we'll give you the benefit of the doubt and assume that you haven't, so we'll tell you about it. By day, it is a symphony of well watered greens and sun-baked browns, joining in joyous harmony with the happy babble of golfers, lusty shouts of fraternity football teams, and beautiful strains of the ROTC band. By night, it is a different place.

Greens and bunkers combine to throw eerie shadows about, and sand traps yawn horribly from the gloom. Flags flap ominously in the breeze, nighthawks screech above, and Mahlon whistles his way from

Two other freshmen appearing before Tribunal were placed on probation and a third man was fined $3 for parking in Osmond parking lot and driving on campus.

sprinkler to sprinkler to sprinkler. All of which makes a pretty weird setting in which to work, but Mahlon doesn't mind.

When asked about it, he gallantly asserted that he wasn't afraid of much of anything. He conceded, however, that it was "kinda lonesome." That's putting it mildly.

If you ever get out that way at night, look around you. It's a beautiful place really. A little frightening at first, but beautiful. And when you see Mahlon's spotlight stabbing the night with its friendly beam, walk over and talk to him. He's a nice guy with an interesting story to tell. And besides—he's lonesome.
