Women Counselors Meet
Mary Jane Woodrow, Women's Recreation Association president, reported that this year's women's orientation program had been a success. The three campus women's hat societies and the independent groups cooperated in supplying counselors for the program.

The women counselors will meet with their groups for the rest of this semester, she added. Michael Hanek, junior class Led from there by the Nittany Lion perched atop a yellow MG, the parade, growing larger by the moment, moved up Shortlidge road and down Pollock road to Recreation Hall.

Pep Rally --

one of State's all-time greats, Francis Rogel.

President Eisenhower told the crowd, "I like my team when it wins—with honor; I like it when it loses—with honor."

President Eisenhower introduced "Rip" Engle by calling him "the greatest coach in the game of football."

Betts, Shephard Appear
Engle praised the team for its hard work and said that Penn State would be "represented by a great bunch of boys."

He introduced co-captains Arthur Betts, end, and Leonard Shephard, back. Each made a short statement. Betts called it "one of the best pep rallies I have ever seen."

James Worth, All-College president, said that with Engle "putting his best foot forward" and President Eisenhower cheering, "we should make it three—with the Penn State students."

abouts of the valued canoe.

The impulsive Bonn, who, it is claimed, never has many rational moments, had accused Krasnansky, Glazer, and Klisahn at one time or another throughout the week.

With the return of the canoe, the wolf was, for a time at least, no longer at the door of student publications.

MC a rally in recent years, interspersed the cheers, songs, and pep talks with a steady line of jokes.

She introduced President Eisenhower by saying that he came from Kansas State College but that then "he saw the light and came to Penn State."

Entertainment at the dance included the "Four Flats and a Sharp," a comedy act by Thomas Smith and Frank Lewis, songs by Patricia Leis and an acrobatic act by Gail Thrush.

Ten Register For Vote Ride

Only ten students had signed for free transportation to Philadelphia for the November elections as of yesterday afternoon.

The offer to pay for a chartered bus and lunch for 50 students was made by Richardson Dilworth, Philadelphia city treasurer, who is running for district attorney on the Democratic ticket headed by Joseph Clark, candidate for mayor.

Dilworth made his proposal when he heard that many Penn State students did not vote because they could not afford the trip financially or didn't want to miss more than one day's classes. A bus will leave State College at 7 a.m. Nov. 6 and return at 10 p.m. About five hours will be spent in Philadelphia.

The first 50 students to contact Lorraine Dalphin in 137 McElwain Hall will receive the free trip home to vote.

The worship of God is the key to life's most rewarding experiences. It constantly broadens the horizons of our minds and hearts. It is the foundation of the mental and spiritual growth essential to a well-rounded life. And it provides the motivation for wider fellowship and more sympathetic relationships among all men. The particular form of worship is far less important than is the reality of worship, which consists chiefly in the conscious experience of adoration of the Almighty and Perfect One, confession of our unworthiness in His presence, affirmation of our faith in His all-sufficiency, and dedication of our lives to His service.
