

Eisenhower Praises Farmers' Efficiency

The cooperative extension system in agriculture and home economics is the most efficient adult-education effort in the world, President Milton S. Eisenhower said last night.

He was speaking before members of the Indiana County Agricultural Extension Association in Indiana, Pa.

"Farm efficiency in the United States has multiplied several times since the extension program was formally launched in 1914," he said. "Today, less than 18 percent of the American people are engaged in farming, yet our farmers produce all the food and fibre we in this country can consume, and a generous amount is left over for export to other countries."

Farmers Have Stake

"Extension is not only the best adult-education program in the world, it is also one of the cheapest," the President continued.

He pointed out that American farmers now have a tremendous stake in some of the crucial decisions being made in the field of national policy.

President Eisenhower also said that American farmers are deeply concerned about present inflationary pressures.

Reduce Expenditures

"Farmers know that we must reduce non-essential expenditures to the utmost," he said. "Indeed, farmers have recently indicated their willingness to have the Federal government reduce expenditures in the agricultural field. This is the first time, so far as I know, that an economic interest group has shown a desire to have its own benefits reduced. I wish all groups in America would demonstrate the same unselfish attitude."

Reducing non-essential expenditures is only one step toward controlling inflation, the President contended. Many other steps are needed. Failure to take them, he added, will ultimately injure farmers more than any other group in the nation, for when inflation finally reaches its peak and is followed by deflation, farm prices will go down faster and further than all other prices, he said.

Hence, farmers should be in the front ranks of those demanding that we now prevent inflation—that we maintain as great stability as possible in our total economy, the President concluded.

The Way—

(Continued from page four) is in the process of failing today—because it has failed to provide those walking the mental tight-rope—like our friend—with sound liberal leadership. Here at home there is no longer the voice of Franklin D. Roosevelt, nor the true spirit of Roosevelt-Wilkie liberalism. Intimidated, slapped down, damned, cursed, and stymied at every turn, liberal thought has been without firm courageous leadership almost since the death of Roosevelt.

So it is very easy for the young people of liberal, progressive thoughts to fall into the communist trap, so precisely covered with liberal words, which hides the complete denial of the right to human and personal liberties and is the true picture of communism.

And throughout the world we ally ourselves with the Francos, Perons, Chiangs, and virtually every other reactionary force in the globe, thus alienating those men and women of liberal ideas who alone can help us help democracy survive as a force in world affairs.

And so we go. Trying to sell the world the idea of human dignity, human freedom, not sure of the truth of the words we speak or the principles for which we stand, trying to fight communism, but instead helping it, driving new believers into its camp instead of winning them to our own cause.
