lived in Oak Cottage during the study.

After an equalization period on a diet low in vitamin C, they began on a basal diet plus a pre-determined amount of crystalline vitamin C. After a week of these meals, they had another week of the same basal diet plus a selected food to supply the same amount of ascorbic acid as was fed during the control period. During the first period, the test food was tomato juice, and during the second, green beans.

Each day the beans were gathered fresh from the college gardens. Two hundred grams of the beans were weighed, cooked, to each of the six girls for lunch, and served as rapidly as possible. Meanwhile, in the nutrition laboratory the beans were analyzed to determine their vitamin C content. For dinner, the girls ate enough beans to make up the amount of vitamin C not eaten at lunch time.

Tests were made to determine the amounts of ascorbic acid given off by the body through the kidneys, and blood tests were taken to find out the amount utilized by the body. The girls helped conduct these laboratory tests.

Dr. Mary L. Dodds and Katherine Fisher, of the Home Economics school, directed the experiment. Both were pleased with the remarkable spirit shown by the girls.

"It is easy enough to put guinea pigs into a cage for an experiment," Dr. Dodds said, "but human beings who become guinea pigs must make their own cage when they take part in an experiment. These girls made their cages with their own spirit of co-operation and genuine scientific interest."

Girls who took part in the study are Barbara Bright, Pearl Kane, Roberta Bleiler, Shirley Nast, Anna Wynosky, and Betty Wynosky.

Cabinet to Recommend Saturday Half Holiday

All-College Cabinet Thursday voted to recommend to the Council of Administration that the fall half holiday be taken on the Saturday of Junior Prom weekend, or if that is not possible, on the Saturday of the Rutgers football game.

The recommendation was approved after Thomas Jurchak, All-College secretary-treasurer, read a letter from the council stating that a proposed half holiday on the Monday following the Pitt football game would cause too great a disruption to class schedules.

Scabbard and Blade Elects Senior Member

Edward J. Hartnett was elected senior member of the executive committee at a recent Scabbard and Blade military society honorary meeting.

Plans were discussed for the hayride Friday night.

Players --

time ahead, are real people.

Ruth Devlin plays the practical mother with great insight. She creates on the stage a warm and vital presence, and in one scene in which she prays aloud in her own simple way, completely commands the audience.

Joseph Brown
Joseph Lee Brown, as the Commodore, is a comic character straight from the best tradition of the great baggy-pants comedians. When he stands in the center of the playing area, looking completely helpless in his old overalls and torn shirt, and says, "Look at me and take hope," he is striking the rich humor of the tradition of the aristocracy of Charlie Chaplin.

The spectacle of the family trying to find a house to match the "stupendable" doorstep which they have attached to their tumble-down shack is appealing. But the way in which the playwrights finally have this come to pass, using completely unmotivated and unlooked-for coincidence, is pretty hard to take.

Poolball Scene

In another scene, the son, Arthur, (played by Carl Wagner) has his mouth stuck when he opens it too wide trying to stuff a pool ball in it in order to win a bet. This, too, is rather difficult stuff, but since it brings some laughs, perhaps it has its place in the play.

Connie Melvin and Marcia Yoffee, as the two daughters, Evvie and Topal, contribute consistently believable performances. And 11-year-old, Beeclee Newcomer, as little Elna Crochet; Myron Cole, as the mild-mannered Mr. Tobin; and Mary Alice Hodgson, as the landlady, Mrs. Dupre, are good in their own right. John Price wields a mean brick as the villain Tayo Delacroix, and Betty Lou Morgan is effective as the florist, Mrs. Beaumont Crochet.

"As Was His Custom"
An "Atmos" clock has no springs. It responds to changes in atmospheric pressure. Student life can never be thus easily mechanized. Human spirits require regular worship to discover for themselves that the God of Jesus Christ is Friendly. Our Lord attended His own synagogue faithfully. Corporate worship binds you together in fellowship with other pilgrims. Make it your business this Sunday to honor God by your presence among His people.
