 he said, was "rubbish."
 Vogeler's explanation was that "it is just a question of time before you confess. With some it takes longer than others, but nobody can resist that treatment indefinitely."

When Vogeler was arrested in November 1949 and taken to Budapest's security police headquarters for questioning, the first 78 hours were "divided into alternate periods of relentless, repititious questioning, and the forced writing of my autobiography," Vogeler told newsmen.

By the 60th hour he began having hallucinations, and at the 70th hour collapsed and was presented with a confession. After one and one-half hours of sleep under a strong light the second phase of questioning started, for 18 hours a day for 12 days.

"There comes a time," Vogeler has said, "when a person is faced with the utter futility of not complying with their demands."

After seeing no one but his Communist inquisitors for a year and a half, Vogeler knew nothing of what had happened in the outside world since November 1949. "You mean there's real fighting?" he said, when told about Korea.

The essential things are headed by "education which is at once the cheapest and most indispensable element in our society."

The rest of the program was devoted to workshops highlighted by a seminar on "schools to keep us free."

President Eisenhower said it "is abundantly clear that an adequate educational program will require money—large additional sums of money over what we are already spending for education."

The additional spending will mean additional sacrifice in the form of taxation, he added.
