Sunday Movies Are A Student Concern

If you were a regular churchgoer, would Sunday movies keep you from attending religious services? Similarly, if you were not a churchgoer, would the lack of movies on Sunday make you attend church?

The answers to these questions seem fairly obvious to us. Therefore, we see no reason for opposing Sunday movies in State College when the issue comes to a vote today.

Of course, very few Penn State students will be able to vote in the State College elections. Just the same, the student body is a major segment of the community, and its views should be taken into consideration. We, therefore, feel it is necessary that the student body talk to friends and merchants in State College and let them know exactly how they feel, one way or another, on the issue.

The main opposition to the proposal naturally stems from the churches in town. These churches have been lobbying all week at special meetings against Sunday films. We feel that these religious institutions are going to have to realize that barring members of a group from doing a certain thing is not going to make them ardent churchgoers.

Fifty and 75 years ago, reading, except for the Bible, cardplaying, and singing were forbidden on Sundays. But times have changed, and as we progress, we learn that we cannot change a person's personal opinions by limiting his freedom to do what he wishes to do.

The same goes for Sunday movies. If a person can't see a Sunday film in State College, he or she will go to the Drive-in or to a neighboring town where movies are showing on Sunday.

We feel that Sunday movies would do no harm in State College. But no matter what our opinion is, we think that the views, pro or con, of the College students should have some influence on Tuesday's voting. After all, we are State College residents for nine months of each year.

Dean Warnock

With the death of Arthur R. Warnock, dean of men emeritus, the College has lost one of its most beloved and revered personalities.

The 67-year-old ex-dean retired two years ago from official College life but never during those years did his interest in the students lag.

He was particularly a champion of the college fraternity system. Last year he was named chairman of the National Interfraternity Conference, a partial recognition of his work in the fraternity field. He could well be called "Mr. Fraternity."

Dean Warnock's activities were so wide and varied that it would be impossible to record them here. Suffice it to say that for all he has done for Penn State and the community of State College, he will never be forgotten.

Don't Let Chest, Blood Drives Fail

Penn Staters are now being asked to contribute to the annual blood drive and to donate to the Campus Chest.

Neither of the drives has been especially successful. As of yesterday, the blood drive had netted fewer than 400 pints, some 200 short of the goal. The Chest solicitations were doing even more poorly. Yesterday only $2750 had been reported to Chest headquarters. The Chest goal is $12,000.

While the poor showing of the blood drive can be blamed on the apathy of the student body, the failure of the Chest campaign to date can be directly traced to the failure of Chest solicitors to contact students.

Regardless of the reasons for the poor showings made thus far, neither of the drives should be allowed to fall below their goals.

The bloodmobile drive has been extended until Thursday. Pledge forms may be secured at the Student Union desk in Old Main, the TUB, the West Dorm Main Lounge, the women's dormitories, and 112 Old Main. The blood you give will be rushed to Korea.

In the meantime, the Campus Chest, which serves nine worthy organizations with one drive for funds, will make an attempt to contact all students. We feel certain that once students are contacted, they will come through generously. Penn State cannot afford to fail in either of these drives.

UN Assembly

The sixth meeting of the United Nations General Assembly is scheduled to open today in Paris. The Soviet Union's 88th attempt to dog-eat-dog affair between the West and the East remains to be seen. There are, of course, several problems of tremendous portent, the solution of which could add substantially to world peace.

Up for examination at the sixth session will be the Soviet-sponsored seating of Communist China, a move by the United States for supervision and control of atomic power, and discussions on tensions in the Middle East. Observers in Paris feel that the Soviets' 88th attempt to seat the Chinese Reds will fare no better than the 87 previous tries.

Other major problems the UN may have to tackle in this session are the unification of Germany and difficulties arising out of an armistice in Korea—if either is brought up for debate at this time.

Some of the issues will be touched upon tomorrow night when President Truman addresses the nation with a speech on foreign policy. But whether much progress will be made at the sixth General Assembly to ease the tense international situation is a decision that rests mostly with Moscow.

Daily Half Colyum-By A. R. W.

(Reprinted from yesterday's Centre Daily Times)

(Editor's Note: The following Half Colyum was written Dec. 2, 1950, by ARW, to be used in case he missed a Times' deadline. Until his sudden death yesterday, he maintained a perfect record and so there was no need to use it before today. Across the top of the copy, ARW wrote: "For the issue of the day on which ARW misses a deadline.")

I have a confession to make, and my face is red, and much! I missed the deadline today. That is, I didn't get the copy for today's column in on time to get into today's paper.

Editor Jerry Weinstein will tell you that this is the first time that that has happened in all the years, in all the happy years, during which he has been connected with this paper. To the best of my recollection it is the first time it has happened in nearly 26 years.

I've had some close calls. When I lived on the campus, at midnight occasionally I'd suddenly recall, sleepy and half ready for bed, that I had not taken next day's column down to the newspaper office. So I'd dress again, and take it down—often on a cold, icy, snowy, rainy, blustery, calm moonlit night.

One time when I was going out of town from my Puddintown home—that was when I lived in Puddintown and had not yet moved to Tahiti where there ain't no cold and there ain't no snow—I put next day's column in the inside pocket of my brown suit, planning to drop it off at the newspaper office on my way out of town. When I was halfway to Harrisburg, I suddenly woke up to the fact—almost darning the car into a ditch as I did so—that I still had next day's column with me. Later in the afternoon when I arrived in Harrisburg I went to the postoffice and bet Uncle Sam that if I put the column into a government stamped envelope and put a special delivery stamp on it, his postal system wouldn't get it to State College in time to beat next day's deadline,—but Uncle Sam won that bet. I didn't miss that deadline.

Of course I don't know the reason why I missed today's deadline. For you see, what you are reading was written some time ago, and has been on deposit in Jerry's desk, waiting like an old dog who had heard in its youth that "every dog has its day."

Anyway, to say it again, I've busted a perfect record. I've missed a deadline.

PSCA Will Hold Member Service

The annual Penn State Christian Association recognition service for new members will be held at 7:30 tonight in 304 Old Main. Approximately 800 students who have signified an interest in the PSCA have been invited to attend the service. Luther Harshbarger, executive secretary of the association, will speak on "Happy Pagans."

Anyone wishing to become a member of PSCA may join by coming to the recognition service or by contacting Charles Douds, membership chairman, or Mrs. Doris Allen, membership secretary, 304 Old Main.

Friday was named for Freya, the Scandinavian goddess of marriage. Fish was her sacred emblem and was always eaten on Friday in her honor, a custom which still survives.
