The legal sources said that while the ball was given under the auspices of armed forces units, it was considered strictly a social operation of the military department and as such would not come under the tax policy government organizations. A similar decision was made in the case of officers' clubs on military reservations a few years ago.

What about students who hand in assignments late?

Buzz claims he's pretty hard on them, but he admits he understands how they feel.

"The student has to prepare his work before coming to class," he says, "but I know so well the things that would prevent him from doing so."

Buzz should be acquainted with the distractions which confront a student, too, for some of his activities last year were All-College Cabinet parliamentarian, president of Forensic Council, co-chairman of the Campus Chest and Community Forum, IFC executive committee, Lion's Paw and Skull and Bones.

Collegiate Athletic Conference. Penn State is a member of both. The two groups were formed to regulate and control college athletics in respect to athletic aid and schedules.

Control Amount of Aid

Both the NCAA and the ECAC, control the amount of aid Penn State may give to its athletes, Schott explained.

At the College, Schott said, financial aid is granted on the individual's need and academic ability. He emphasized, "Every student who has received aid has met his scholastic requirements." In order for a student to participate in extra-curricular activities at the College he must have a .65 average.

At present, there are 145 athletic scholarships available varying in value, Schott said in answer to a query from the floor. "This does not, however, represent all the aid which is given to athletes," moderator Riley said.

Alumni groups and friends of the College also contribute a large portion of the money available to athletes. The recent scandal disclosures are not so much the fault of the sports," Engle said, "but rather should be attributed to a nation-wide lowering of moral standards."

After the panel discussion, AAUP officers were elected. They include F. B. Krause, professor of Latin, president; F. R. Matson, professor of ceramics, vice-president; William Smith, professor of family relations, secretary; and R. S. Farwell, instructor in industrial engineering, treasurer. Outgoing president is Dr. Nelson McGear, professor of political science.

Fur-trimmed gowns, a fashion innovation last year, seem to have attained lasting popularity.
