Returning to the International Livestock exposition held in Chicago after a ten year lapse, Penn State won 32 awards with 26 sheep in the wether classes and five awards with three horses in the pure bred draft horses division.

The sheep awards included the grand champion pen of three lambs and the reserve, or second place, individual lamb. First place went to the University of Kentucky.

Ancient Reliefs In Picture Form On Exhibition

There is also a composition by Jackson Pollock in which the artist has applied oil, wire, string, pebbles, and other materials to glass.

The exhibit also includes pictures of early experimental construction in industrial materials by Gabo, Pevsner, and Tatlin; Noguchi's ceiling decorations for the American Stove Co. in St. Louis; a relief by Ben Nicholson; a Lunar landscape constructed by Noguchi with magnesite, string, and cork; and a bronze open-work frieze, "Amity", by Mary Callery.

Following their prize-winning events, the sheep were entered in a pure bred Southdown wether lamb carcass contest. They took fifth place.

Shaffner Shepherded Flock
Southdowns, the same breed which gave the College its last grand champion pen in 1940, won the championship pen again this year. In 1941 Penn State won the grand championship with a Shropshire lamb.

Carroll Shaffner shepherded State's entries this year. He replaced the retired Peter Mackenzie, who tended and showed scores of championship sheep at the International in previous years. Carl Everett accompanied Shaffner.

Besides the championship awards this year, Penn State won:

Wethers: first, second, sixth and 15th in Southdowns; first, second, and fourth in Dorsets; second, third, fourth, and sixth in Cheviots; second, fourth, seventh, eighth, tenth, and 12th in Hampshires; and third and eighth in Shropshires. In addition, second and fourth awards of the Hampshire Association specials went to the wethers.

'Director ULC' Wins
Pens: first and fifth in Southdowns; first in Dorsets; first in Cheviots; second and third in Hampshires; and third in Shropshires. The Hampshires pen also won second in the Hampshire Association special.

In the pure bred draft horses division "Director ULC," three year old stallion, was grand winner. The stallion received a trophy for its perfection.

"Lynda Hope" received the senior and grand champion mare award. The other mare, "Lisa Farceur" won the reserve senior and grand championship in the Belgium mare class.

Taff Attended Horses
The two Percherons, "Director ULC" and "Lynda Hope" are unbeaten in competition in five exposition contests this year. They were champions at Ohio State, Illinois State, and Indiana State Expositions and the Eastern States exposition at Massachusetts.

Elmer Taff, superintendent of horses at the College, tended the mares at the show. He was accompanied by Alex Buchan, beef cattle herdsman, and Ralph Yergy, a student in animal husbandry.

Prof Hits 'Penurious' Legislature

Under the headline "Teachers at Penn State Sport That Threadbare Look," Leon D. Skinner, assistant professor of English Composition, condemned the smallness of the state legislature's appropriation to education in a letter published Tuesday in the Pittsburgh-Press.

Skinner, who has already received letters from Pittsburgh grade school and high school teachers supporting his views, said he was "amazed at the play the letter got." Inserted in the text of the letter was a caricature of an unhappy professor, complete with patched trousers and elbows popping out of a threadbare jacket.

Skinner called it a "remarkable likeness."

Threadbare Profs

The letter has attracted "a lot of personal comment" at the College, Skinner said, and at a liberal arts department heads meeting it was recommended that his letter be read.

Skinner decided to express his views after reading two columns in the Press. In the columns Mrs. Walter Ferguson quoted President Milton S. Eisenhower, from a speech made in Harrisburg several weeks ago, and said "It's hard to reconcile the threadbare look of some of the professors with the expensive draperies and velvet carpets which greeted my astonished eye in these student union mansions."

In his letter, Skinner said "The neat dovetailing of the two articles leads me to believe that my own campus at Penn State was one of the two 'hat she had visited recently, especially when she talks of 'the threadbare look of some of the professors.'"

No Lounges for Teachers

The politicians will take the first cut in the budget out of education when they start their economy drive, the letter said, even though Pennsylvania is near the bottom of the 48 states in the per cent of income spent for education.

Skinner said that the teachers (Continued on page eight)
