

The Lion's Lair

By ERNIE MOORE

The action of Avery Brundage, president of the National Amateur Athletic Union, barring "subsidized college athletes, even those with scholarships" from the 1952 U.S. Olympic teams has American sports fans fighting mad.

It seems that Mr. Brundage has taken it on himself to solve the entire subsidy problem by taking it out on the United State's chances of winning the 1952 Olympics.

By Brundage's statement, "anyone who is given any scholarship, payments, or anything of value" to play sports is barred from the International games as far as competing for the U.S. is concerned.

In 1912, after Jim Thorpe had put on a one man show for the U.S. in the Olympics, the NAAU declared Thorpe ineligible because he accepted money while playing semi-pro baseball, and forced him to give back all the trophies he had won.

Following the action of the NAAU in Thorpe's case and adding Brundage's new ruling, it would seem that no one who has ever played or competed in college, now and in the past, under an athletic scholarship will be allowed to compete in the Olympics.

Since the NAAU took Thorpe's trophies from him after it was found out he had played ball for money, why shouldn't, following Brundage's statement, all former college athletes be declared ineligible because they received scholarship help in the past. After all, we would certainly think a free college education comes under "anything of value."

But will this policy of barring all former athletes who have received scholarships be in effect with the new ruling on scholarships. If it doesn't go into effect, the NAAU will be violating the principle it used to declare Thorpe ineligible.

Using the same "logic," all former U.S. trophy winners who competed in college under scholarships, should be made to give back all the Olympic awards they won and all records they might have broken stricken from the books.

Mr. Brundage, you've stuck your foot in your mouth. Now grit your teeth and hold on.

Penn State Places Six Gridders On 'Big Three' All-Star Team

Penn State placed six men on the District Big Three All-Star team selected by the Pittsburgh Press. Pitt placed 11 men and West Virginia five.

Len Bartek, Lion guard, and Paul Anders, fullback, were named to the offensive team while end Pat McPoland, tackle Stew Scheetz, linebacker Joe Gratson, and half-back Bob Pollard were named to the defensive team.

Pitt won the district team title this year, defeating both West Virginia and the Nittany Lions. The Panthers take possession of the trophy, sponsored by the Junior Chamber of Commerce in Pittsburgh, Morgantown, and State College, which is awarded to the Big Three champ. This is the first year the award has been given.

There were five repeaters on the district team, three from Pitt and two from West Virginia. The district All-Star team:

IM Boxing

Betas Hold Slim Lead

Co-defending champ, Beta Theta Pi, grabbed a forfeit win yesterday in the IM boxing tournament to retain a slim lead over the field after the first five days of the 1951 tournament. Six Beta boxers have notched wins, either by decisions or forfeits.

Sigma Nu has advanced five men into higher brackets, while Alpha Tau Omega, Delta Tau Delta, Phi Kappa Tau, Delta Upsilon, Phi Sigma Kappa, are all bunched with four decisions.

Ray Webb, Chi Pi, and John Baffa, Delta Upsilon, moved up in the 121-pound bracket in slambang fashion, Baffa's win coming in 25 seconds of the opening round. The abbreviated scrap is the shortest this year.

Webb called on all his resources in the final round to take a close decision from Pi Kappa Phi's Robert Wylie. Both men, although dead-tired, but game to the core, put on a near-sensational final round. Their first two rounds of perpetual motion gone, the little men stood toe-to-toe, give and take, for the last two minutes.

Baffa's quick stopping of Earl Hall, Sigma Phi Alpha was one of the two shortened scraps of the six bouts. Hall was barely out of his corner when Baffa opened up. Referee Eddie Sulkowski, with Hall back in his corner, put a halt to the contest at that point, a 1951 record time.

The other brief bout found Joe Bonchonsky, Phi Sigma Kappa, halting Carlton Corson, Pi Kappa Phi, at 45 seconds of the second round. Bonchonsky used his reach advantage to stop his shorter, aggressive opponent in their 155-pound go.

Sigma Nu's John Moore swarmed all over Andrew Krassowski, Pi Kappa Phi, for three rounds to get the nod and advance in the 175-pound division. Moore dropped Krassowski in the second frame with a slashing right uppercut.

Don Fields, Phi Sigma Kappa, and Tom Orr, Sigma Phi Epsilon, notched wins in the 145-pound bracket. Fields finished strong to capture the decision from Theta Ed Barth, Phi Kappa Psi, in close, hotly-contested bout.
