

France Bids For British Participation

STRASBOURG, France, Dec. 10 —(AP)—French Foreign Minister Robert Schuman backed down from a strongly supra-national control of the proposed European army today in a bid for British participation.

He was backed by Belgian Foreign Minister Paul Van Zeeland who also urged a form of political control more likely to attract British support. Both spoke to the European Consultative assembly which has the form of an international parliament but no actual legislative powers.

At the recent meeting of Atlantic Pact powers in Rome, Schuman outlined a plan for a European army which would be managed by a European defense commissioner responsible to a council of ministers and an assembly chosen by the participating governments. The plan was designed to get German units lined up for defense of the West but to dilute political control by any one nation so that Germany would not again be a danger to Europe.

The British government has declared it would not join such an army because of the surrender of sovereignty involved in the Schuman plan. Ratification of the plan by some European parliaments may be difficult to obtain unless Britain decides to go in.

Today the French Foreign Minister asked for a "modest, limited" political control. He said a small beginning would be better than no beginning, and that a "high authority" similar to that which will operate the European steel and coal pool was not now practical for defense "where questions of peace or war and human lives will be at stake."

an envelope and blew it off the filing cabinet. It hit the cop in the eye, sending him to the hospital.

Talk about the innocent bystander always getting hurt! In Boston, a woman was sitting in her room in the second story of an apartment house. Outside in the street, a car hit a pedestrian. The victim's shoe was knocked off, flew 25 feet up in the air, went through the open window of the apartment and hit the woman on the head, inflicting scalp wounds.

A steeplejack was injured in a fall in Indiana. He fell two feet from a bar stool.

And in Cincinnati, a car was struck by two trains traveling in opposite direction—leaving the driver standing on the tracks, holding the steering wheel. He suffered only cuts and bruises.

And speaking of safety, a hunter had his life saved by a tightly-folded safety magazine. Someone else accidentally shot him in the chest, but the bullet was deflected from his heart by the magazine. This story is the end:

In Des Moines, Ia., a taxi driver helped a passenger unload her packages—and had the seat of his pants taken off by a door-handle of a passing car.
