

Customs Begin; Frosh Confused

The how's and when's of the beginning freshman customs created more confusion than usual yesterday, with only a few women flaunting green bows and name cards, and dinks and ties sold to less than one-half of the first-semester men.

Although about 49 freshman women were to have started customs Monday, the late arrival of bows and cards resulted in the majority going about disguised as upperclasswomen. Remarks ranged from "It's quite a mess" to "Nobody has the slightest idea what they're supposed to do."

Yesterday afternoon 42 women had bought customs at the BX, while others bought paper and ribbons at local stores and made their own.

Heated Debate

At the same time only 44 out of the approximately 91 freshman men scheduled to start customs today had signed the list at the BX.

Aside from this situation the frosh said their main trouble had been during registration, when most of them had to go through the boards of control.

'Going Fine'

The search for buildings takes up all of the ten-minute walking time for many, who said they generally don't get lost if they walk first to Old Main and set their sights from there.

But in spite of the complexities of the first few days, the practically unanimous decision is that "everything's going fine." Many of the women have been at the College for week-ends, and find they take everything in their stride.

From these the most frequent remark was a wish that dating restrictions would soon be over so they could again participate in the social life they tasted as visitors to the campus.

Pen Pal Requested By English Woman

The "lovely gesture" of the Penn State students who arranged for Derek Turnbull's fiancée, Gladys Robson, to visit the College has inspired Auriol Noakes, who lives near Miss Robson's home town, to request a pen pal from the College.

Miss Noakes, apparently impressed by the British couple's reunion at the Delta Chi fraternity house, wrote "to the students" that she "was very pleased to see in the paper the lovely gesture you gave for one of my countrymen in your college and a girl from near my home town."

"I would very much like a pen pal from your college," she said in her letter. "If there should be anyone interested, I would be very pleased," she continued.

Miss Noakes describes herself as "28 years of age, five feet four inches tall, brunette, fair coloring."

Her address is 27 Holly avenue, Dunston, Gateshead 11, NR Newcastle, England.

Miss Noakes' addressed her letter to "The Principal, Pennsylvania State College, Pennsylvania, U.S.A."

Enrollment Goes Over 10,000 Mark

Enrollment for the spring semester passed the 10,000 mark yesterday, an increase of nearly 600 over the figure at a similar time during registration last spring.

The office of the registrar reported 10,002 students in all classifications had registered by 4:30 p.m. The figure is, however, still 178 students short of the fall enrollment.

Included in the undergraduates on campus are 142 first semester freshmen, 93 men, 49 women.

Of the total figure, 6848 are full time male students, 2389 are full time female students.

Included in the figures compiled late yesterday were 410 part-time male students, 132 part-time female students, and 223 students whose forms had not yet been classified.

Registration for special and unclassified students will continue until Friday. Graduate students may register until noon Saturday.

Two Students Are Suspended For Cheating

Cheating on a final examination has resulted in suspensions of two students at the College, Dean of Men H. K. Wilson reported yesterday.

In line with regular College policy the names of the students were not released.

The cheating was discovered, Wilson said, after an instructor became suspicious of the high grade earned by one student in the final examination. A handwriting check revealed that the student had had an accomplice take the test for him.

After they were apprehended both students confessed at a hearing before the College disciplinary committee.

Because of their confession after their plan failed, Dean Wilson said, both will be automatically reinstated as of June 9.

Seniors Slate Sunday Session

Committees to study commencement invitations and senior finals will also be appointed at the meeting. Olmsted said that the senior ball committee will be announced by All-College Cabinet at its meeting tomorrow night. He said the ball committee is appointed by cabinet because the dance is an All-College affair. The dance is scheduled for May 16.

The agenda for the class meeting also includes reports of the committees on the President's reception, small diploma and commencement entrance. The latter committee has been studying the possibility of using two entrances to speed up commencement.
