Talent Search Ends at Noon

The search for talent for the All-College Talent Show, sponsored by the Penn State Club, will end at noon today, Arnold Gasche, talent show chairman, announced yesterday.

The finals will be held on Feb. 22 in Schwab Auditorium. Prizes of $25, $15, and $10 will be awarded to the winners.

Thus far, sixteen group and single performers have signed up, Gasche said.

The judges for the auditions will be Peter Lansbury, George Cowbright, John Pagonis, Moylan Mills, William Burrows, David Hyman, and Andrew Jaros.

The advisory group was established last semester when a group Krasnansky also urged that all of 16 students, representing different campus groups, met with Evert and gave their views on student government.

Express Ideas

Evert said that people at the meeting would have an oppor-tunity to express their ideas on what should go into a party plat-form, what they think is wrong with the student government at the present time, what they think the student government should do in the future, and any other views they have on campus poli-

At last semester's meeting, the group told Evert that they thought campus politics should be kept before the students throughout the year to keep stu-dents informed of what student government was doing for them.

Campaigns too Short

They also said that All-College elections amounted to nothing more than popularity contests be-tween party candidates. They said that platforms should be stressed more.

Most of the students present at the meeting also thought that the election campaigns were too short. Not enough students had a chance to learn what the Lion or State Party platforms represent or to meet their candidates, they

Courtmen Seek Record Tonight In Hoya Contest

By DAVE COLTON

Penn State's cagers will attempt to break a record which their popular coach, Elmer Gross, was instrumental in making when they Representatives of any campus meet Georgetown tonight in one of the few remaining home games organization or living unit may of the season. The contest will get underway at 8.

If the Lions win this important fray, they will smash the 12 game consecutive win streak which was established during the 1941-42 season. Gross was co-captain of that outfit, but wouldn't be sorry to see the record broken. His present team tied the mark with a 66-52 triumph over Rutgers Wednesday.

The Nittanies will not only attempt to extend their 12 game streak, but hope to improve their 14th place national rating. Despite their 14-1 record State has a tall foe tonight which could easily snap the surprising string.

Gunning for State

The Hoyas, coached by Buddy O'Grady, have been inconsistent this season, but have beaten some strong foes. One of the visitors' most impressive wins of the year was their 75-67 upset of Canisius

Also not to be overlooked is the tension of a winning streak such as the Lions have fashioned. Every enemy has been gunning for the Blue and White and to-night's foe will be no exception.

Georgetown has a team which wins in spurts. After dropping the opener to Fordham, they won five straight, then lost five in succession. After winning three more they were dumped 70-58 by Fordham. One of their defeats was a 80-74 loss to Dayton, one of the best quintets in the country.

St. Francis of Lorento defeated Georgetown, 85-79, Thursday night at Altoona.
