

Alumnus Stars in New Movie

After almost ten years of working toward stardom, Don Taylor, '42 Penn State alumnus, has his first leading role in the motion picture "Japanese War Bride," to be shown at a local theater Feb. 19 and 20.

The picture, now playing at the Lexington theater in New York City, concerns the problems of intermarriage between oriental and occidental. A lieutenant critically wounded in Korea marries a Japanese girl with the Red Cross, and brings her to America to face his family and friends.

Playing opposite Taylor will be Shirley Yamaguchi, known as the "First Lady of the oriental screen." This will be her first American picture.

Taylor started his dramatic career in College Players productions, where he was "outstanding—no doubt about it," according to Prof. Arthur H. Cloetingh, head of the Dramatics department.

As a freshman he had the juvenile lead in "Our Town," and went on to win leading parts in "Mr. and Mrs. North" and "Taming of the Shrew."

It was during a performance of "Taming of the Shrew" that he caught the eye of a pair of Penn State alumni, film scripters Julius and Philip Epstein. They suggested that he go to Hollywood, and said they would do what they could to help him.

The best plans can go awry, however, and as Taylor soon found himself in Hollywood with no income, he took a doorman's job in a Hollywood theater. After several months Metro Goldwyn Mayer agreed to give him a screen test, and he was signed and cast in a show as a result.

Before the picture was half-completed Taylor was drafted into the Air Corps. Possibly this experience helped his career—for before he knew it Taylor was on stage in New York, playing the part of Pinky in the Air Corps show, "Winged Victory." He appeared in the same role some time later when the show was made into a motion picture.

During the filming he met Phyllis Avery, a young actress who also appeared in the picture. They are now married and have two children.

After leaving the service, Taylor signed a long-term contract with a major studio, but it was not until he got his release in 1950 that he began getting hand-picked roles. Even the security of a weekly paycheck couldn't compensate for that.

As a result Taylor has appeared in "Battleground," "Father of the Bride," and "Father's Little Dividend," and had the part of the young doctor in "The Blue Veil."

Faith is an essential in every successful life. Faith in God is a requisite to right living. Knowing God as our Creator and Benefactor buttresses man for the trials and temptations of life.

Faith in our fellowmen is necessary in our complex social and economic life. Every man is to be trusted until proven unworthy of our confidence.

Faith in one's self provides the "drive" that allows one to climb the ladder of success. The man who lacks self-confidence will not inspire it in others.
