A. C. E. Proposals

Miss Real Evils

With the recent disclosures of irregularities in collegiate athletics there arose a demand that college and university presidents step in to clean their own athletic houses.

The result of this demand was the formation of a committee of ten college presidents, headed by Michigan State's John Hannah. The committee met, drew up its proposals, and submitted them to the executive committee of the American Council of Education. The proposals were approved by the executive committee with but minor changes.

The presidents have stepped into the athletic field—a much needed move—but we wonder if the proposals they have made will solve the problems of college athletics. The National Collegiate Athletic Association apparently does not think so.

While the A.C.E. proposals have their merits, the plan of the presidents also has its weaknesses, shortcomings, and blind spots. Where they eliminate some evils, they also create some new ones. In many places the plan is downright impractical. In other places it discriminates against the athlete much as some college practices made the athlete the special character.

One of the major proposals of the A.C.E. is that spring practice be eliminated in football. Quite counter to this is the N.C.A.A. ruling that spring drills be limited to 20 within a 30-day period.

It would seem that the A.C.E. is putting the cart before the horse in dealing with the spring practice problem. If a college enrolls only those athletes who are legitimately scholastically eligible, 20 days of football practice in the spring will not hurt the student's academic standing.

But the A.C.E. counters with provisions that there shall be no outright athletic scholarships and that a student shall make the normal progress toward a degree each year he is in college. The latter of these is sound enough, but the former has come in for some caustic criticism from people in athletics. And perhaps justly so.

All scholarships will be based on academic ability and economic need, under the A.C.E. proposals. In the minds of many athletic leaders such a proposal will only serve to further entrench the heavily endowed institutions who have enough funds to provide scholarships for "students" and additional funds to provide scholarships for "student athletes." Such a proposal also makes it possible for these heavily endowed institutions to continue giving full scholarships to athletes, while the legitimate "student" scholarships cover only part of the student's expenses. The student-athlete—academically qualified—is getting room, board, books, and tuition, not because his academic ability merits a full scholarship but rather because he is an athlete.

In effect, the proposal of the A.C.E. declares there is no value in intercollegiate athletics worthy of encouraging by means of a scholarship.

We have no sympathy for the outright athletic scholarship. We have no sympathy for enrolling a student in college simply because he can throw a football 50 yards or run a hundred yards in 9.5 seconds. We advocate the athletic scholarship for the athlete who meets the normal academic requirements of the college.

We believe that athletics have a value and that where a student is academically qualified for college work, he should be eligible for the athletic scholarship. We believe that the athletic scholarship is not the evil. We believe that the evil lies in the abuse made of the athletic scholarship by many colleges.

We do not believe the A.C.E. action has done much to get to the core of the evil.

Responsibility Lies With Students Too

The current squabble in All-College Cabinet over the pending constitutional amendment regarding the changing of student fees keeps bringing up one question, either indirectly or directly. That is, whether cabinet is the representative student body it is supposed to be. The question arises because of the still raging controversy over the Student Union fee passed three semesters ago.

Everyone will agree that a Student Union building will be a great asset to Penn State and that if we are to have one, it will have to be financed by the students themselves. But some question whether the building will really benefit all students. Others say that if the fee to provide the building keeps even one person from getting a college education, then the building is not worthwhile.

As we see it, the only thing members of cabinet can be charged with is sometimes looking at certain issues with the College rather than the student in mind. This may not be particularly dangerous, but it does mean that the people on cabinet are not living up to their duty to the students.

One way, perhaps the only way, to curb this is for the students to contact their representatives on cabinet when an important issue comes up to make their views known. Each student is represented on cabinet in at least four ways: through his class president, the elected All-College officers, his school council president, and the president of Leonides, Panhellenic Council, Association of Independent Men, or the Interfraternity Council.

Our cabinet representatives are not mind-readers, and it is obvious they can't know how we feel on matters unless we tell them. It would be wise for students to remember that they have a duty to perform, too. They must realize they can't just sit back and expect cabinet to carry on alone. If they do, they shouldn't complain when some proposal passes that they don't like.

Phone Record Set

LOS ANGELES—(AP)—A 17-year-old girl and her boy friend, both unidentified, have established what is believed to be a new world endurance record for a romantic telephone conversation.

The pert blonde, who refused to give reporters her name, entered a telephone booth at 8 o'clock yesterday morning. She talked with her boy friend until 3:30 p.m.—seven hours and 30 minutes.

The cost? One nickel. And they want to cut the time limit down an hour here on campus.

Little Man On Campus By Bibler

"Of course I'm not educated—I spend all my time going to class!"

Actress Laments Movies' 'Old Men'

ROME—(AP)—Some of Hollywood's top notch actors are too old to make love, Sylvana Pampanini, one of Italy's popular actresses, maintains.

In her book, these include such shining stars as Clark Gable, Charles Boyer, Gary Cooper, Humphrey Bogart, Spencer Tracy, Paul Muni, and Ronald Coleman.

"They were all born more than a half century ago," she said. "It's ridiculous to see a man, old enough to be your grandfather, playing an ardent lover."

"The violent, passionate kind of love that melts a woman's resistance looks more sincere when it involves a young man. The scene has more fire."

The sultry 27-year-old actress, who is making a film called "The Woman Who Invented Love," charged that "these old men, stripped of their movie glamor, would seem pitiful in the arms of a woman."

"There's a difference in being kissed by a young man and by an old man," she went on. "When a young man kisses, you know you've been kissed."

As proof, she exhibited livid marks on her arms, left there by Rossano Brazzi, handsome co-star in the picture, after he kissed her in a scene.

"He wasn't fooling when he kissed me," said Sylvana. "An older man wouldn't have the strength to hold you so tightly."

"Maybe I was a little too rough," said Brazzi, who formerly was Italy's middleweight boxing champion.

"No! no! no!" she protested. "You were perfect."

Then she came back to her thesis.

"The last thing a woman should see before she closes her eyes to enjoy a kiss is the man approaching her with eyes half closed, lips half parted in a convincing manner—as though he meant what he was going to do."

"Imagine an old man's face approaching a girl like that. Why she'd bust out laughing right in his face. No, Hollywood needs a bunch of new lovers—young and virile, in the prime of their youth, not men who were born in the last century."

She shuddered: "Why it's indecent being kissed by an old man."

'Hungry Kiss . . .'

A CRITIC of Hollywood lovers, Italian actress Sylvana Pampanini demonstrates one style of kiss from her repertoire, with Rossano Brazzi. She calls it the "Hungry Kiss" and says it should satisfy the average man's appetite.
