Chapel Donations Should Build Chapel

While it has been made clear that the Penn State-in-China committee has not taken any final action on discontinuing the allocation of Chapel donations to Lingnan University, it would seem almost inevitable that the time has come for reconsideration of the current program.

With representatives of the West being barred from Communist China, Penn State-in-China as it was originally envisioned is no longer a reality. True, the funds are still being put to a good purpose, research work in Florida by the fabulous Daddy Groff and his assistant.

But this was not the original intention of the funds.

For that reason, full-scale reconsideration of the allocation of the funds should be begun. We doubt that most students who contribute in Chapel would favor continuing allocating the money to Penn State-in-China as it is now constituted.

Of three major suggestions for allocation of the funds, the one proposing a College Chapel seems the most appropriate. In addition, it has been suggested that the funds be used for the construction of an international house at the College, or for the support of another university under a program similar to Penn State-in-China.

We do not have in mind a large Chapel—a replacement for Schwab, so to speak—for such a project would be out of the scope of the Chapel offerings. What we are thinking of is on a much smaller scale, a place of meditation, a place where students and faculty members could spend a few spare minutes out of the stream of the rush of campus activities, a place where campus marriages could be conducted.

The other suggestions have their merits, but the need for a Chapel on campus far outweighs the other possibilities.

Alpha Phi Omega Wants New Blood

Alpha Phi Omega, national service fraternity, will hold a mixer tonight at 7 in the Hugh Beaver room on the third floor of Old Main.

This, in itself, is a small news item to most of the students on campus. The fact that the group now has 100 active members and does perhaps more work around the College than any other group seems to make this meeting more significant. One of the most under-rated organizations on campus, APO does most of its work "under cover."

A member of the group journeys to the infirmary every night to take orders from patients for refreshments and cigarettes. Members aid election officials at the campus polls.

New students at the College perhaps remember APO best because of the aid members gave them during Orientation Week at the information booth in front of Carnegie Hall. APO members supplied transportation for speakers in the Religion-in-Life Week program. Escorting is another frequent function of the group.

The reward for such helpful and frequent services? There is apparently no reward, except in service to students, the College, and guests. Perhaps the greatest reward of all is improving the already high reputation of the organization.

Requirements for entering the group are small, but achievements are great. A student must have a desire to serve (it is not a group for slackers), previous affiliation with the Boy Scouts of America, and satisfactory scholastic attainment.

If you intend to drop in at the Hugh Beaver room in Old Main tonight, don't expect publicity—just a deep appreciation from those you serve.

Interpreting the News

Big Four Divided On Austrian Issue

By J. M. ROBERTS JR.

Associated Press News Analyst

Washington is denying any intention, as Russia charges, of making a separate peace treaty with Austria.

Instead, the Allies are launching a new effort to break the long stalemate for an over-all treaty including Russia.

The situation, however, seems closely akin to that regarding Germany prior to establishment of the Western German Republic.

The Allies were slow to move, not wishing to formalize the split between Russian-occupied and Allied-occupied Germany. The military situation was a strong factor when a constitutional convention was finally called at Bonn and the facts of life recognized.

No separate peace has been made, and none is in the offing. But the new contractual arrangements now coming to a head amount to virtually the same thing. At least they represent an interim treaty.

Austria now is under nominal four power control just as Germany was prior to 1949. And it works just about the same. The Russians exercise non-cooperative control over their zone, and have been stripping it of its resources and industrial production just as it does in Czechoslovakia and the other satellites. Eastern Austria is behind the Iron Curtain and contributes nothing to the overall national economy.

On the other hand, it is dependent upon Western Austria for its electric power, and for that reason the Russians might be expected to make more of an effort than they did in Germany to prevent formal partition.

Observers in Vienna were inclined to think that one reason for the Allied move at this time was to test Moscow's overall intentions. If Russia causes a partition, it will be taken as an indication.
