A motion to substitute a 30-minute radio program for the final judging of the IFC-Panhel sing March 30 was passed unanimously at a meeting of fraternity and sorority presidents Sunday night.

The sing, which had been scheduled for March 30, was postponed because all possible judges will be attending a music festival in Philadelphia on that date, Jerome Gibson, co-chairman of Greek Week, said.

Dates for summer cruises for Navy ROTC students were released yesterday by Commander Richard L. Billings, associate professor of Naval Science.

Billings said all senior and sophomore regular NROTC men will participate in an Atlantic Ocean cruise from July 18 to September 5. The cruise will include calls to two ports in Europe and operations in the Guantanamo Bay area.

Billings also said all contract seniors will participate in a cruise in the Caribbean area from August 9 to September 5. Both cruises will start at Norfolk, Va.

All NROTC junior regular midshipmen, Billings said, will be ordered to the Naval Air Station at Corpus Christi, Texas, for aviation indoctrination and to Little Creek, Va., for amphibious training. They will report June 27 to the Little Creek base to begin their six week program.

Regular NROTC Marine Corps science seniors will report to Marine Corps School, Quantico, Va., June 21, for eight weeks of training, and all contract NROTC Marine Corps seniors will report to the Marine school June 1 but will only have a six-week training program.

Committee Calls RILW 'Successful'

This year's Religion-in-Life Week program was called successful at an evaluation meeting of the RILW general committee Saturday afternoon.

Jane Montgomery, student co-chairman, called the speaker program "excellent," and said the noon worship services held each day in the Little Theater had been "well attended."

The fireside discussions seemed to interest students most, according to Miss Montgomery, and she said she wished there might have been more of them.

The 55 fireside discussions scheduled in dormitory lounges and fraternities were praised by others and the committee discussed the possibility of having a series of such discussions periodically throughout the year, led either by local religious leaders or by Chapel speakers who might consent to remain at the College to take part in such a program.

The general committee voted to permit Inter-Religious Council, sponsor of RILW, to use the balance of approximately $200 remaining from this year's RILW budget to carry on such a program.

In addition to fireside discussions, evening speakers, and noon worship services, the week's program included morning devotions over WMAJ, two Chapel addresses, a dramatic presentation in Schwab Auditorium, classroom discussions, a tea, and three dinner meetings. One hundred fifty students and faculty members worked on the committees arranging the week.

Twenty appointments are available for the students placing highest in the test.

Gon and Greenfeld To Appear at TUB

The Hillel Forum, sponsored by the Penn State Hillel Foundation, will present Zamira Gon, interpretive and character dancer, and Hanoch Greenfeld, Israeli pianist, at 8 p.m. tomorrow at the TUB.

Interpretive Dancer

Zamira Gon

Miss Gon, who was born in Jerusalem, is famed as Palestine's foremost interpretive dancer. During the war, she entertained British, Australian, and American troops through the U.S.O. and its foreign counterparts.

She served in the British RAF in Egypt and following her discharge, was brought to the United States for advanced performances. She directed dancing in the Broadway play "A Flag is Born," in which Paul Muni starred.

Miss Gon will appear in several groups of dances, including Hassidic, Arab, and Israeli.

Miss Gon's accompanist will be Hanoch Greenfeld, Israeli pianist, now in New York completing his musical education. Greenfeld, on recommendation of Leonard Bernstein, appeared in 1949 at the age of 17, as soloist with the Israel Philharmonic Orchestra, playing the Liszt Piano Concerto No. One.

In addition to accompanying the dance solos, Greenfeld will play groups of piano selections by modern Israeli composers.

This program is the final one of the winter series sponsored by the Hillel Forum and is open to the public.

Survey Shows Trend Toward Science Work

Students in American colleges and universities are gradually swinging away from the liberal arts and humanities in favor of scientific and professional subjects.

This trend was announced by the New York Times after a recent survey of 100 representative institutions.

The survey indicated that colleges and universities expect in 1952-53 to have 19 per cent fewer students in the humanities, social studies, and liberal arts. They anticipate a decrease of only 5 per cent in the natural and applied sciences.

Some of the reasons given for the lessening of interest in the liberal arts were that large numbers of World War II veterans flocked to the practical or technical courses that might help them to make a living more quickly and that the Korean conflict reemphasized the need for technically trained men.

Technical subjects are also emphasized by the military services, by war-related industries, and by the government's research division. Many students consider most significant "getting a job that pays a lot of money," the survey showed.

The trend is affecting faculty rolls, which are being reduced because of the decline in overall enrollment during the past two years. Some institutions report that they will be forced to reduce the number of professors 20 to 30 per cent. The most drastic cuts will be in the humanities and liberal arts, the report said.

The average height of men in this country is 5' 5 1/2", the weight is 155 pounds.

Group to Offer Constitutional Amendment

The Liberal Arts Student Council last night favored a proposal to make it compulsory for representatives on All-College Cabinet to respond to the will of their groups.

Edward Shanken, council president, and Leonard Goodman will work on wording the proposal as an amendment to the All-College Constitution.

The proposal would assure the group that its views, and not just the personal views of its representative, are expressed on cabinet, Shanken said.

William Stepin pointed out that representatives are usually credited with having common sense and are permitted to vote on issues at their own discretion.

The council unanimously voted to drop the investigation of night blue books. Thomas Farrell said plans were being made for the student-faculty mixer April 27 at the TUB.

Shanken was elected as the council's representative for the Ugly Man contest.
