5 Agronomy Profs Attend Conference

Five members of the School of Agriculture faculty represented the College at the Eastern States Agronomy Conference held recently at West Springfield, Mass.

The conference, held annually, is attended by agricultural specialists from those states cooperating in the Eastern States Farmers' Exchange.

Those attending the conference were Dr. Herbert R. Albrecht, head of the Agronomy department; Dr. Warren B. Mack, head of the Horticulture department; Dr. Henry W. Popp, head of the Botany department; Dr. Lawrence L. Huber, research plant breeder; and James Eakin, extension agronomist.

Prof Joins British University Faculty

Dr. Clarence S. Anderson, professor of agricultural education, has joined the faculty of the University of Reading in England as a Fulbright research scholar.

Anderson will also attend classes in adult agricultural education while in England.

Town, Students Seen In Better Relations

The overall picture of student-borough relations is good and is steadily improving, two borough representatives told the Dean of Men's advisory committee last night.

Burgess Edward K. Hibshman and Police Chief John R. Juba said friction between the students and the borough has notably decreased this year. They also urged the College's student leaders to help promote good relations by discussion with the student body.

Will Leave Impression The community has built up a wonderful relationship with the fraternities alone in the past ten years, Hibshman said, and cooperation between the two is 100 per cent better today.

Most students do not realize what a public relations influence they are, Hibshman added. If a student shows a desire to help visitors and to show off the Penn State campus, he said, it will leave a lasting impression that will benefit the College.

Dean of Men H. K. Wilson said he has noticed the increase in good student and borough relations. He said this is realized when his office is notified of each

Three Indian Brothers

Three Indians Find U.S. Customs Odd

Women playing field hockey, automobiles parked solid for seven city blocks, eating only three times a day and then food from cans—these things seem nothing short of commonplace to Americans, but three brothers from India found them the most surprising things they saw in America.

7 to Head Open House Groups

Seven sub-committee chairmen from the Engineering Student Council were named last night for the Engineering school's open house by Charles Falzone, president.

The council also heard suggestions for a mixer and the parking problem on the campus.

The sub-committee chairmen named for the open house scheduled for May 10 are Max Schuster, aeronautical engineering; Daniel Snopkowski, mechanical engineering; Charles Miller, civil engineering; Herbert Hoover, industrial engineering; Chester Howells, electrical engineering; Gifford Albright, architecture; Fred Pope, military science and tactics.

A mixer was suggested for the new and old student councils and the faculty after the Engineering Student Council elections to be held this spring.

PSCA Roundtable

"Why Evil?" will be the subject of Jean D'Andre, sophomore in liberal arts, at the Penn State Christian Association Roundtable at 7 tonight in 304 Old Main.

Food from Cans

Prodipio, or Prody, 26, came to Penn State last fall on a scholarship from the College. He is working for his master's and doctor's degrees in rural sociology.

He received his bachelor's degree in dairy husbandry from the University of Allahabad, the largest American missionary college in India. Coming from five years in an American missionary school, Prodipio had already been indoctrinated into "Americanism" so wasn't as shocked as his older brother.

It is Prodipio who complains of all American food "coming from cans." He says he misses India curry and rice, and also eating five times a day. After six months in America, Prodipio says he isn't homesick. "We have a good department, good people to work with. I guess the novelty of the country hasn't worn off yet," he says. "You just have to get to know the score."

Shunil, 23, is a newcomer to Penn State, having arrived not quite two months ago. He is

Manchuria Prepares For Plague

SAN FRANCISCO, March 11—(AP)—Signs that plague, believed rampant in Communist North Korea, is spreading to Southern Manchuria multiplied today.

The Peiping radio reported the organization of a vast epidemic prevention corps for duty in Manchuria, next door to Korea.

The broadcast, heard here by the Associated Press, contained more urgent pleas for mobilizing health workers than it had since Red China first accused the Allies of using germ warfare about three weeks ago.

From the start, Allied spokesmen called the charge "fantastic." But the Red propaganda barrage became so violent that Gen. Matthew B. Ridgway, Allied supreme commander, made it a special point to tell a news conference in Korea Tuesday the charges were "completely, absolutely and categorically false."

The Red radio indicated that epidemics have hit the Mukden area, south-central Manchuria, and a wide belt along the Yalu River boundary. The Communists blame insects "dropped by American planes."

Grass Officials Meet to Plan Sixth Congress

Officials of the Sixth International Grassland Congress met recently with President Milton S. Eisenhower to discuss plans for the annual event to be held Aug. 17 to 23 at the College.

Attending the meeting were W. A. Minor, assistant to the Secretary, U.S. Department of Agriculture; W. R. Chapline, executive secretary to the organizing committee of the State Department; Lyle Webster, USDA director of information; Dr. P. V. Cardon, chairman of the organizing committee; Harris Baldwin, USDA, in charge of exhibits; Joseph S. Sagona, State Department.

H. L. Carnahan, assistant professor of agronomy; Dr. Lyman E. Jackson, dean of the School of Agriculture; Dr. Herbert R. Albrecht, head of the agronomy department and in charge of local arrangements for the congress; and Dr. Russell B. Dickerson, vice dean.

Food Officials Will Cooperate

John Hueler, head of the Nittany-Pollock dining hall, told the Pollock Council last night that the food officials wish to work with the Nittany-Pollock men as much as possible with regard to the meals served in the Nittany and Pollock dining halls.

Hueler had been invited by the council to an open question-and-answer session in order that better relations between the area men and the officials might be reached.

Frank Schrey was elected council representative-at-large.

The council decided to change the meeting time as it conflicted with other meetings. Joseph Haines, president, named a 6:15 starting time for all future meetings instead of the usual 6:30 time.

The council unanimously voted to post an agenda before each week's meeting.

Insurance Test Scheduled Tonight

The Life Insurance Agency management aptitude test will be given at 8:15 tonight in 217 Willard.

The test is designed to determine ability to sell life insurance only, and is open to anyone interested in selling insurance. It is sponsored by the Insurance Club and the agency management class. Results are retained by the College Placement office and are confidential.
