Why Penn State has limited its entrants in National Collegiate Athletic Association tournaments in gymnastics, wrestling, and boxing to a total of six men was finally answered yesterday.

Nittany entries in these national tournaments have been Polling places in all women's dormitories except Grange will limited to Eastern intercollegiate champions by the Senate committee on athletics. For this reason, only three members of Penn State's EIWA championship wrestling team and two members of the boxing team will compete in the NCAA tournaments. It was for this reason that only one gymnast appeared in the NCAA tournament this past weekend.

The two candidates polling the highest number of votes for each office will compete in final elections Thursday. WSGA town senator, WRA president, and assistant intramural chairman will not be voted on in the primary. By virtue of this rule, which completely reverses previous College policy, such outstanding athletes as wrestler Jerry Maurey, runner-up in the 137-pound class in the East, and boxer Tony Flore, runner-up in the Eastern 139pound championships, will not compete in the nationals. By virtue of this rule, gymnast Bob Lawrence, runner-up in the East on the sidehorse, was not allowed to compete in the nationals this past weekend.

Not only are these athletes being denied something they have earned by virtue of their performances all season long, but a policy has been established for Penn State, which if followed by other NCAA members would all but wreck the NCAA tournaments, for with competition so restricted a winner would not be a true champion. Penn State has long been a staunch supporter of the NCAA and we see no reason why national gymnastic championships were held this past weekend.

And that is exactly what this rule does.

The short-sightedness of this policy can be illustrated by citing the case of Don Frey, of the current wrestling team. To Win Free Ticket
Students may enter the photo identification contest today by identifying the pictures of the Ugly Man contestants now appearing in the College avenue window of the Athletic Store.

The student who can identify the most contestants correctly will win a ticket to the IFC-Panhel Ball, William Slepin, contest winner will be named in tomorrow's Daily Collegian. In case of a tie, the winner will be chosen by lot.

Miss Alderfer yesterday repeated her appeal to the goodnature of the person who took the money. No questions would be asked, she said, if the money were returned. She suggested that the money could be mailed to the Campus Patrol office, Old Main; the Daily Collegian, Carnegie Hall; or her room, 410 Thompson Hall.

Competition in National Collegiate Athletic Association tournaments by Penn State's wrestlers, boxers, and gymnasts has been limited to athletes who have won Eastern titles, the Daily Collegian learned yesterday. The policy will also apply to all other sports where individual competition is involved.

The action barring non-champions from national competition was made March 17 by the Senate committee on athletics. No announcement was made at that time, but coaches were informed of the decision.

The Daily Collegian learned of the action by the committee from Franklin L. Bentley, chairman. Other members of the committee Norman R. Sparks, and Prof. J. Harris Olewine.

Lawrence Already Barred

The decision to limit national competition to Eastern champions will bar the entry into the NCAA tournaments of wrestler Jerry Maurey, runner-up in the 137-pound division, and boxer Tony Flore, runner-up in the 139pound division in the East.
