

Seniors May Buy Lion Coats Today

By CHUCK HENDERSON

The traditional Lion coats will go on sale to seniors from 1 to 5 p.m. today at the Student Union desk in Old Main for $1.90 each, Robert Koons, chairman of the Lion coat committee, said yesterday.

The tradition of wearing Lion coats started with the wearing of Lion suits in 1926. The senior class innovated the tradition shortly after move-up day had been designated in the spring of 1926.

The seniors wished to have some symbol to indicate their class standing and the Lion suits were chosen. Lightweight suits were purchased by nearly all the senior class men for this purpose.

The following year the suits were abandoned in favor of coats, and the coeds of the College began to participate in the custom.

It became an accepted and competitive practice at the College for students to decorate their Lion coats with pin-up girls, autographs, slogans, school symbols, etc.

The coats, which were a fad at some of the larger schools in the country such as Princeton and Cornell, were an immediate success, and the custom has carried down to today.

Today coats will be sold only to seniors who have their matriculation cards, Koons said.

The custom of wearing the Lion coats declined during the war years, according to Koons, and this year's committee is attempting to strengthen the custom.

Last year's committee, Koons said, did not sell the number of coats that they anticipated. He predicted that this year's sales would be better.

Working with Koons on the committee are Robert Klingensmith and Charles Coffman.

It's the sensible test... the 30-Day Camel Mildness Test, which simply asks you to try Camels as your steady smoke — on a day-after-day, pack-after-pack basis. No snap judgments! Once you've tried Camels in your "T-Zone" (T for Throat, T for Taste), you'll see why...
