Soph Honorary, High School Plan Festival

Cwens, sophomore women's activities honorary, will sponsor a Strawberry Festival from 6:30 to 8:30 p.m. Saturday at the Frazier street playground. The festival is open to the students of the State College school system as well as College students.

The purpose of the festival is to raise money for the support of a Dutch war orphan. Featured at the event will be the sale of strawberries and ice cream, and a novelty cake walk.

Assisting with the festival are senior high school students. They have nominated candidates for titles of king and queen. Students will cast penny votes for candidates and the nominees receiving the greatest number of penny votes will be crowned the Strawberry Festival king and queen.

Nancy White, member of Cwens, is general chairman for the event. Committee work is being handled by Cwens and several seniors at the State College High School. Miss White said that the festival has a two-fold purpose—the support of a war orphan, and the attempt at a closer integration between the College and high school students.

Dip in Spring Hats Veers to Right Side

By EVVIE KIELAR

The direction spring's most interesting hats are taking is an exciting new trend to the right. A delightful dip, a new tilt, a subtle swerve is emphasized, making any profile enchanting any hour of the day.

The side tilt is gracefully and flatteringly achieved in shell-shaped patterns of straw, notably black, palermo. Velvet binding is here still much in demand, although the most effective examples are completely untrimmed—another fashion trend of the season.

Most of the new low priced French and Italian originals are shell-shaped straw and piquet, with face length diamond net, very little floral trimming, and no feathers (notable this season for their absence). Plaid skimmers and straw sailors are also featured in this lineup.

Fifth Avenue is combining chin-length net with the straw sailor to create a pert effect with all non-essentials omitted. Short dangle earrings, under net, blend with the curve of the face.

Although face length net is still much in evidence, veils are undeniably going up to tickle the nose, mask the mascara, shade the eyebrows, and, in some cases, to outline the hairline.

Nylon, the newest fabric in hats, contributes a durable threadlike effect, which seems to be replacing feathers and flowers. Nylon picture frame hats have been featured in the newsreels and in recent fashion shows, highlighting outfits costing up to $3500.

Although floral decorations are indeed becoming rarer as the season advances, flower-trimmed sailors or straw shell-shaped creations are extremely popular with summer suits-coats of rayon and gabardine.

The demand for white is not great as yet, although fashion experts agree white straw and pique may be worn through most of the year.

Another quirk of fashion practiced among the elite dog lovers of the nation is the novel practice of fitting one's pooch with a matching topper.
