

Social Security Benefit Bill Flounders in House

WASHINGTON, May 19 (AP)—A proposed $300,000,000 a year increase in social security benefits floundered in the House today on a charge it would open the way for socialized medicine.

The bill came up under a situation requiring two-thirds majority for approval and with amendments barred. It got a thin 150-140 majority, but that was 45 votes short of the needed two-thirds.

In theory, the measure still had a chance for revival if the sponsors got clearance from the Rules Committee for procedure in the normal parliamentary way. Actually, there appeared to be little likelihood of such a move, in view of the already developing adjournment rush.

Chairman Doughton (D-N.C.) of the Ways and Means Committee, author of the bill, told a reporter soon after the vote:

"I have no present plans to go before the Rules Committee. Let those who voted to kill it take the responsibility, as far as I am concerned."

The socialized medicine cry, raised against the bill by the American Medical Association and echoed by several Republican House members, was directed against a section designed to preserve the Old Age and Survivors Insurance rights of persons totally and permanently disabled.

The primary feature of the measure was a raise in benefits of at least $5 a month for practically all persons now drawing retirement benefits under the program, and up to $5 a month for those who retire in the future. Proportionate increases were provided for wives, widows, children and other beneficiaries.

What is believed to have been the first toll road in the United States was built from Alexandria, Va., to Snigger's Gap.
