

Two Political Parties Compete in Government Councils Represent Dorm, Town Men

Two major political parties compete each semester to place their candidates in Penn State student government offices. These two parties are the Lion Party and the State Party.

In the fall, elections are held for freshman and sophomore class officers—president, vice president, and secretary-treasurer. Lion and State both select candidates through clique meetings and

Liberal Arts School to Elect New Delegates

Freshmen representatives to the Liberal Arts Student Council, representative body of all liberal arts students, will be elected this fall.

They will complete the group of seven seniors, 11 juniors, and eight sophomores which discusses student opinions and complaints and has a voice on All-College Cabinet through Douglas Schoerke, council president.

Last year restrictions regulating textbook changes were passed by the College Senate after hearing student complaints concerning undue changes which were submitted by the council.

The council has begun a faculty rating system to improve the quality of instruction, sponsors an annual student-faculty mixer, and has given financial support to Inking, campus literary magazine.

The LA Angle, edited by William Slepik, is published by the council to tell the students of outstanding people and organizations in the school.

Other council officers are Thomas Farrel, vice president; Ann Quigley, secretary-treasurer; and Neal Reimer, assistant professor of political science, adviser.

'Kickoff Dance' Slated for Friday

The "Kickoff Dance," sponsored by the Campus Chest, will be held at Recreation Hall following the pep rally next Friday night at the Lion Shrine. Jack Huber and his orchestra will provide music. Walter Sachs, chairman of the event, said that tickets will be available soon at the Student Union desk in Old Main for 50 cents each. Tickets will also be sold at the door. All profits going to the Campus Chest, Sachs said.

Grassland Congress

Representatives of more than 55 countries met and exchanged information on agricultural developments at the Sixth International Grassland Congress held at the College Aug. 17-23.

nominations. The candidates are then voted on by members of the respective classes.

New freshmen and sophomores will have a chance to get into politics at the College when the two parties begin to hold their first clique meetings this fall. Freshmen and sophomores are eligible for their own class offices in addition to party clique offices.

At present, State Party has elected the majority of the new officers, including two of the All-College officers. Lion Party took the All-College secretary-treasurer post and two junior class offices. The spring election was the first split ticket victory at Penn State since 1948.

The two political parties will organize this fall, elect clique officers, and begin working for election of the six freshman and sophomore class officer posts. In addition to clique officers, campaign managers and publicity men will swing into action, distributing campaign literature and speaking before dormitory, fraternity, and independent groups.

During the last year both Lion and State parties held three of the six freshman and sophomore offices. The elections, held Nov. 15 last year, brought an even split, but the Lion Party captured both presidencies.

The main purpose of political elections at the College is to select those persons who will represent the student body on All-College Cabinet, the highest representative body.

ICG Teaches Government

The Intercollegiate Conference on Government was established at the College to give students an opportunity to learn, through experience and model organizations, how government works. ICG operates on a regional and state level, holding both regional meetings and state conventions.

Last March students from the local chapter attended the regional meeting held at Hershey Junior College. This regional meeting was a preliminary to the state ICG conference, held in Harrisburg the following month.

The Harrisburg meeting was a three-day mock presidential convention. The delegation also discussed the right of the President to seize any basic industry.

James Hand, a junior at the College, was elected by the central regional executive committee to serve as regional director for 1952-53.

Students Need Athletic Books To See Games

Student admission to all Penn State athletic contests, either in Recreation Hall or on Beaver Field, may only be gained by presentation of AA (athletic association) booklets to be given out during registration this week.

Seating at the football games this fall will have several changes from last year. The inception of a flashcard cheering section will cause the senior section, along the 40 yard line, to be divided.

Also, the players' parents and other complimentary ticket holders will be seated behind the Nittany bench on the east side of the field, instead of on the opposite side as was the case last year.

Juniors will still be seated along the end zone at the closed end of the stadium, and freshmen and sophomores will be seated around the rim behind the goal posts.

Admission to the flashcard cheering section may be attained by signing up during registration. Seniority will determine the group, with seniors getting first chance, juniors seconds, etc., until the section is filled.

Tickets for parents and friends may be bought through the Athletic Association office in Old Main. A season ticket for the five home games may be bought for $15. Individual game tickets are also available with a scale from $2.60 to $2.40.

Players Schedule Student 'Shindig'

A "shindig" for all new students and any other students interested in working with the Penn State Players will be held from 7 to 9 p.m. Wednesday in Schwab Auditorium.

The meeting, which will acquaint students with the facilities of Schwab Auditorium, is sponsored by Players.

Crew managers will discuss the duties and responsibilities of their crew groups. A special entertainment program is planned for the meeting.

Men students living in the East Dorm areas or downtown are represented by three councils of the Association of Independent Men. The Pollock Council is the governing body for the Pollock Circle dorm area, Nittany Council serves students living in that area, and Town Council represents all independent undergraduates who live off-campus.

Dormitory officers of the individual living units in the Pollock area compose the Pollock Circle Council. Officers elected from the council and representatives-at-large serve on the AIM Board of Governors.

The president of the 19-man council may not continue as president of his dormitory after his election to the top council post. As a result a new election in that dorm must be held.

Most of the council's work is done through committees, such as the food committee, which handles student complaints about food and discusses the problems with the dietician. Other committees are the welfare committee, in charge of handling damages, and the awards committee, in charge of the annual selection and recognition of Pollock residents outstanding in activities, scholarship, and athletics.

The Nittany Council is made up of representatives from each dormitory. From the council a president, vice president, recording secretary, and treasurer are elected along with two representatives-at-large, to represent the group on the AIM Board of Governors.

In addition to its efforts to correct difficulties which arise in the Nittany area, the council sponsors social events and plays an active part in campus drives.

The Town Council is made up of one representative per ward in the downtown area. After ward representatives are chosen, the council elects an executive committee comprised of a president, vice president, secretary, and treasurer. The executive council, along with one representative per 500 students is on the AIM Board of Governors.
