

Institute Head

Mary P. Shelton

Shelton To Direct Institute

The Ellen H. Richards Institute, established at the College in 1941, has been transferred to the School of Home Economics and will be under the direction of Mary P. Shelton, President Milton S. Eisenhower, said today.

Miss Shelton, who succeeds Dr. Pauline Mack as director of the institute, has also been named associate professor of textiles and clothing in the Home Economics school. Associate professor at the University of Tennessee for the last seven years, Miss Shelton was also head of the program of research in textile chemistry.

The institute will become a part of the Department of Clothing and Textiles and its research activities will be concerned with the clothing and textiles field. The work will be done in the Textile Chemistry Building, which is now being remodeled with new equipment.

The institute program will divide activities in the departments of foods and nutrition, home management, housing, and art.

SG Day - representative of the Dean of Men's office will attend.

At the same time, representatives of Leonides, governing body of independent women and of Panhellenic Council, governing body of 19 Penn State sororities, will meet in Atherton Hall lounge. A representative of the Dean of Women's office will attend.

Concluding the day's program is a regularly scheduled All-College Cabinet meeting at 8 p.m. in Schwab Auditorium. The meeting will be open to all students. Immediately preceding the meeting, President Milton S. Eisenhower will make a brief introductory speech on student government and how it aids the administration.

Freshman attendance at this meeting will partially determine the length of the period that customs will stay in effect, Schulte said. He said that the freshmen will not be required to attend, but the attendance will offer some indication of class spirit and adaptability to Penn State.

Political Scene

must have a great man to head the country.

This "great man" campaign for Eisenhower is a good selling point for the Republican Party this fall. The General led the European powers temporarily, and had considerable leadership experience in other parts of the world. Even many Democrats will grant that Eisenhower is a greater man than Truman, but they still maintain that he is not the great man for the job.

One other excellent selling point presented thus far by the Republicans is the corruption-in-high-offices issue. However, the recent news concerning Richard Nixon, Republican vice presidential nominee, at least temporarily dimmed the Republican chances to sound this issue. Although there is probably little legal or moral wrong in Nixon's acceptance of $18,000 for his campaign, the American public has been made corruption-conscious by the Republicans themselves.

Personalities are also taking a big hand in formulating the American voters' ideas. On the Democratic side, the confident, brisk tongue of Adlai Stevenson is hindered, in some opinions, by his acceptance of the active support of Truman. The democratic vice presidential candidate, John Sparkman, has remained pretty much out of the campaign thus far and may remain the silent partner in the Democratic camp.

Eisenhower, with his convincing off-the-cuff talking style, has been hindered in many eyes by the campaigning in his behalf of Senator Taft, who is a less-convincing speaker and whose record contradicts many of Eisenhower's stands. Eisenhower's acceptance of Senator Joseph McCarthy and other Republican bug-a-boos has also made him a less effective candidate.

The next few weeks will show more of the American opinions of these four leading political figures—Stevenson, who is now touring the north-east and central states; Eisenhower who toured the same area this week; Truman, who will whistle-stop the east, central, and west in the next two weeks; and Taft, who is now speaking extensively in east and central United States.

committee on student-faculty relations and will present two proposals to cabinet. One proposal will deal with the College advisory system and the other will suggest a more workable program of informal meetings between faculty and students. The proposal will include a request that cabinet inform the faculty of the suggestions.

Other committee reports to be heard at the meeting are a report on the Campus Chest by Samuel Nowell and a report by Mary Pettigout on the Freshman Customs Board.

Cabinet will be presented with names for committee positions on the elections and Spring Week committees. A parliamentarian will be named at the meeting.

A recess will be called about 9 p.m. to allow those students who must leave for dormitories to do so.

Fan Causes Grange Fire

The fire which occurred in Grange dormitory yesterday started when the fan for a master vacuum cleaning unit operated from the basement of the building caught fire and ate through a flexible coupling, shooting flames into some pasteboard cartons.

It was caused when someone evidently turned on the unit switch thinking it was a light switch, Philip A. Mark, captain of the Campus Patrol, said.

Smoke was noticed about 6:30 a.m. by some of the women living in the dormitory and the Alpha Fire company was called.

The only damage occurred in the fan of the vacuum cleaning unit.

Four to Compete In Dairy Judging

Four dairy husbandry students will be in Chicago today to compete with representatives from more than 25 universities for scholarships, cash prizes, and gold medal awards at an international dairy products judging contest.

The Penn State team will judge quality of cheese, butter, ice cream, and milk products. David Evans, Leslie Shallenberger, Charles Shearer, and Robert Jensen, accompanied by Dr. George H. Watrous and coached by Francis J. Doan, are members of the Penn State team.

Dengler to Speak To Hellenic Group

Robert E. Dengler, professor of classical languages, will address a reorganization mixer of the Penn State Hellenic Society at 7:30 tonight in the TUB.

The group, composed of students of Greek extraction, was established to provide social activities. Refreshments will be served following the talk tonight, and vice president Theo Balabanis has urged all eligible to attend.

Other officers include John Sarikianos, president; Bessie Georgaris, secretary; and Thomas Caloyer, treasurer.

Customs -

customs day program aroused new interest and helped revive a laxity shown by hat men and women, Patricia Ellis, sophomore member of the customs board, announced. She said upperclassmen took a more active part in enforcing customs on women than upperclasswomen did on men.

Miss Ellis reminded freshmen that regular customs are again in effect. Social conversation with the opposite sex is still limited to "Hello." Women are allowed in the West Dorm lounge between noon and 6 p.m., not 6:30 p.m. as reported in yesterday's Daily Collegian.

Officials Arrive Saturday to Study State Government

Three government officials from the Ryukyu Islands, which extend south from Japan and include Okinawa, will arrive at the College Saturday for a two-week study of government in Pennsylvania at the state, county, and local level.

Their itinerary also will include conferences with personnel of the College School of Agriculture and the School of Engineering.

The purpose of the project, sponsored by the department of defense, is to show the Ryukyuan how the democratic form of government functions in the United States.

Students May Enlist In Army Schools

Those accepted will be given a written guarantee of schooling prior to enlisting, Kennedy explained.

Young Democrats To Hold Meeting

The Young Democratic Club of Penn State will hear Arthur H. Reede, professor of economics, at 7 tonight in 102 Willard. Reede will discuss what Young Democrats can do in connection with the present political campaign.

The meeting is open to all interested students, Kenneth Doverspike, chairman of the club, announced. He added that a "Students for Stevenson" campaign would be started by the club in the near future.

Research Group Meets Today

The initial meeting of the Industrial Relations Research Association will be held at 7:30 p.m. today in 208 Willard.

Members and students interested in the betterment of labor-management relations, especially those students in the industrial engineering, industrial psychology, and labor-management curricula, may attend the meeting.

Freshmen may also attend, the executive committee announced.

Robert Whitner, first semester architecture major, suffered a dislocation of his right ankle and laceration of the head in a fall Tuesday. He was admitted to the Centre County Hospital where he was taken by members of the Campus Patrol.
