

Schulte Lifts Customs After Game Saturday

Freshman customs were lifted Saturday following the Purdue football game. James Schulte, co-chairman of the Freshman Customs and Regulations Board made the surprise announcement in an official radio bulletin Saturday night over station WMAJ.

In the bulletin Schulte cited the freshman class for its excellent spirit exhibited before, during, and after the game and commended the freshman cheering section on Beaver Field. Freshman men living in McKee Hall volunteered to guard the Lion Shrine Friday night against possible Purdue vandalism.

After the game a group of about 75 McKee men darted from the stands to defend the goal posts against any destructive action similar to that demonstrated at the Temple game.

Customs Board to Meet

The news took both freshmen and upperclassmen by surprise. Frosh queried similarly confused hatmen on the validity of the announcement, and no one seemed quite sure whether the news was true. However, no dinks or green bows were seen on campus yesterday.

Alleged violators reported during the last week will be required to report before the customs board for hearing at 8:15 tonight in 201 Old Main. Minor punishments will be meted out to freshmen sentenced by the board.

According to Schulte, the tug-of-war scheduled for tomorrow night has been canceled. The tug-of-war was set last Thursday night after a mob of about 500 frosh gathered in the courtyard of the West Dorms to denounce hatmen and demand the end of customs. Schulte appeared on a Hamilton Hall balcony to ask the crowd to go home and promised a tug-of-war to determine if customs would be ended.

Program Called Success

The two weeks customs period was the shortest observed since customs returned to the College in 1945. Last year the customs program extended over three weeks. Men's customs were removed after an attempted tug-of-war versus sophomores. The rope broke, but customs were removed for men. Dress customs for women and dating regulations remained in effect for an additional four days.

The customs program this year was a success, Schulte said, but would have been even more effective if all upperclassmen had taken a more active part in reporting offenders and enforcing a stricter observance of the prescribed customs.

Noted Cow, Josie, Dies Of Old Age

Penn State's most famous cow, Penstate Veeman Josie, a purebred Holstein that brought renown to the College, died yesterday in the veterinary barn four months before she would have reached her 20th birthday. Death was attributed to old age.

For three years Josie was the greatest milk producer in the nation; at present her descendants are high ranking producers. The College herd now contains about fifty of her direct descendants.

Her death broke up one of the first three-generation trios of cows classified as excellent by the Holstein-Friesian Association of America.

When Josie was officially retired last January she was more than three times the productive age of the average cow, but still produced until May when her health began to decline.

Plans have been made to place a permanent plaque and a large photograph of Josie in the new barns being built, according to Donald V. Josephson, head of the dairy department.

Josie's official production records are 257,778 pounds of milk and 8187.5 pounds of butterfat. Her descendants, the seventh generation of which is now producing, are still piling up new records. G. R. Barrett, superintendent of advanced registry for the Holstein breed, has called her offspring "A truly remarkable family of long-lived and good producing cows."
