

'Rush' Jobs Available For Student Employment

Students searching for extra dollars would do well to investigate the opportunities in 'rush' jobs offered by the Student Employment office, 112 Old Main, John Huber, supervisor, has announced.

'Rush' jobs are jobs that must be done almost immediately. Huber explained that these are the rule rather than the exception in an ordinary day for Student-Employment personnel.

Polio Victim --

tures of some members of the football team. The twins are assistant managers of the squad.

The Cohens approached a pledge brother, Ed Austin, Daily Collegian photographer, for help in complying with the request. Together the three obtained autographed photographs of co-captains Stu Scheetz and Joe Graton, Tony Rados, Jesse Arnette, Dick Jones, Joe Yukica and Coach Rip Engle.

Coach Engle, in autographing his photograph for Jaycee, added, "I know you can win the big game ahead of you." He also contributed a football which was later painted with "Penn State - AEPi 1952."

Incidentally, Jaycee's and the Cohens' hometown of Cranston is near Providence, R.I., the location of Brown University where Engle coached football for six years before coming to Penn State in 1949.

After the football and photographs were obtained, the entire house decided to adopt Jaycee's cause. At lunch last Friday Ronald Zweigenbaum suggested a collection for the little polio victim and netted $26.

The goldfish-swallowing took place last Friday after supper. Barton Burke volunteered to swallow a goldfish he had just purchased if the fraternity members would contribute $15.

But goldfish-swallowing wasn't as easy as Burke had expected. After he failed three times in a row he offered to contribute $5 to Jaycee's fund if anyone could succeed.

Then Howard Salus stepped forward and downed the goldfish on the second attempt. The exhibition swelled AEPi's amount for Jaycee's phonograph to nearly $50.

Now Jaycee will feel a bit closer to Penn State's football team because of his autographed pictures of the players. And perhaps he'll find his convalescence in bed a bit easier when he listens to strains of music on his new phonograph.

Constellations May Be Viewed At Observatories

The College observatories will be open to the public from 7 to 9 p.m. tonight, tomorrow, and Friday, Dr. Carl A. Bauer, assistant professor of physics, has announced.

A close study of stars and nebulae will be possible at that time, Dr. Bauer said. Viewings of the globular star cluster in Hercules, the Ring Nebula in Lyra, and the double star Albireo will be possible through telescopes.

Dr. Bauer said there have been many requests to view these objects, and while none are too spectacular through a moderate-sized telescope, they are impressive when their great distance and true nature is considered.

A few hundred of the stars in the globular cluster of Hercules will be visible. Hercules contains over 100,000 stars, but a star must be 250 times as luminous as the sun in order to show as a distinct point of light on a small telescope.

Dr. Bauer explains that light requires 320 years to cross the globular region of space which contains the 100,000 stars, even though light travels 186,000 miles a second. The cluster has traveled through space for 36,000 years.

The telescopes can be reached by going through parking area No. 50, east of the TUB. They will be operated by members of Alpha Nu, astronomical society.

Center Stage --

organized by persons who saw plays in State College, and techniques originated at Center Stage have formed a pattern for productions of that type. Stereophonic sound was first used at Center Stage, and Penn State is probably the first college to offer a course which deals specifically in arena practice.

Yeaton has written a book dealing with the production of arena plays, which will be published in mid-November.

From the casts of Players' Center Stage shows, many of the performers and production personnel have continued with dramatics as teachers or graduate students in summer stock, or as professional actors and actresses. Of the small cast shows, an estimated 50 per cent of the performers has continued with dramatics after graduation.

Players support their claim of success at Center Stage with the fact that a larger percentage of the local population attends each of their performances than can be hoped for by professional companies on Broadway or in other towns and cities.

Yanks Win --

out in the seventh, Kuzava calmly drew the count to 3-2 before making the Duke pop to Gil McDougald.

Still in grave danger of a Dodger eruption, the blond southpaw worked on Jackie Robinson while 33,195 spectators held their breaths.

Robby fouled one, took two balls and fouled two more. Finally he lofted a sky high pop over the infield. With a stiff crosswind blowing from left field, second baseman Billy Martin barely made a running catch while his hat went flying just past the pitcher's box.

Although big Bob still had two innings to go, that was the ball game. In those brief moments he wrung the neck of the Dodgers with a gritty job of clutch pitching.

Thus the Brooks, never a series winner, failed for the sixth time and the Yanks rode to their 15th championship in 19 tries. It was the American League's sixth straight series win, a record topping the old high run of the 1935-39 era.

Stengel's feat of winning four in a row shot him into the record books with Joe McCarthy who led the Yanks past the National Leaguers in 1936, 1937, 1938, and 1939. Nobody else ever did it.

"Represents education that continues,"

says GEORGE GALLUP

Founder of the American Institute of Public Opinion; formerly Professor, Pulitzer School of Journalism, Columbia U.

"A serious weakness of the American educational system is the missing link between what we are taught in school and what we learn after leaving school. The Reader's Digest represents education that continues. It arouses and satisfies keen interest in the vital issues of the day and in varied fields of lasting knowledge."

Look at the wide range of subjects in any issue—The Reader's Digest is designed for the well-rounded individual who cultivates interests far wider than the confines of any particular field.

From the wealth of material that is published each month, the editors select those outstanding articles no thoughtful person would want to miss. Each article is condensed to present the essentials clearly, yet preserve the full content and flavor of the original.

The Reader's Digest offers a continuing liberal education for millions of men and women with alert, open minds.
