

Seating Plan Vetoed By WSGA Senate

By LIX NEWELL

The Women's Student Government Association Senate last night went on record as opposing the Recreation Hall seating plan with a 5 to 4 vote and one abstention.

The plan was proposed by Ernest B. McCoy, dean of the School of Physical Education and Athletics, and would provide 300 seats in Rec Hall for faculty, graduate students, and alumni.

Election of two freshman senators was set for Oct. 28 and '30 with Louise Glud as chairman of the committee. Roseann Monack, Eleanor Horvitz, and Patricia Bauer are the other committee members.

The Pennsylvania Week motorcade, a parade of decorated cars, as proposed by the Penna. Week committee, was endorsed by Senate. Each group may enter one car which will be judged at the Homecoming Game with Nebraska.

Mrs. Vera Furst, head hostess at Simmons Hall, has said that she will be adviser and aid for the Junior-Senior Faculty Reception to be held Nov. 10. Mrs. Furst has helped with the reception in previous years. Suggestion boxes for names of faculty to be invited are to be placed in each dormitory hostess office.

Carolyn McElroy is head of the committee for the reception. Barbara Wallace, Joyce Buchanan, Jane Larpenner, Carolyn Pelczar, Ellen Wandel, and Hilda Hoge-land, are other members.

Besides the display in the West Dorm showcase, the WSGA publicity committee will advertise two movies to be shown by Blue Key, junior men's hat society, for Penna. Week at 7:35 p.m. Wednesday in 119 Osmond. They are movies of the Penn. State-West Virginia football game and "This Is Penn State."

The proposed amendment increasing junior women's 11 o'clock permissions from four to six per semester and those of first semester seniors from six to eight was read for the first time and will be voted on at next week's meeting.

Barbara Werts, vice president of Senate, was named as WSGA's candidate for queen of the Belle Hop Ball, sponsored by the Hotel Administration Greeters Club. Jean Mastin was last year's queen.

Bolivian Will Teach IFC Dance Classes

By HELEN LUYBEN

Rosario de Murillo, a very dark and pretty Latin, has been imported all the way from Bolivia by the Interfraternity Council to teach Spanish dancing.

It is incidental that she is here also to study.

By the time the IFC Ball rolls around next spring, IFC President Arthur Rosfeld predicts everyone will be expert at the rumba, mambo, samba, tango, bolero, conga, and pasodoble and anybody who is anybody on campus won't dare attempt a conventional waltz or two-step.

With the help of George Donovan, manager of associated student activities, IFC plans to start the seven-week coeducational dance lessons Oct. 27. Donovan predicts a big turnout, but the class has to be limited to the first 200 persons who apply at the Student Union desk in Old Main before Oct. 20.

"The turnout for the beginners' dancing classes being sponsored by Mortar Board has been good," Donovan said. "One hundred thirty-seven persons have already signed up."

The class isn't limited to fraternity men, or even to college students. Faculty and other college employees may also join.

"All you need is to be willing to learn and not be aware of the people around you at first," Rosario explained in an interview this week. There will be five classes of 40 persons each, held Monday through Friday at the TUB. The cost for the series will be $1.

When asked whether teaching 200 persons to dance wasn't going to be too much for her, Rosario answered, "No, I can take care of them. I love to teach people to dance."

With this opportunity to loosen up one's sacroiliac and lose one's self-consciousness and inhibitions, there is just one draw-back. Pretty little Rosario is Mrs. de Murillo. And her husband will be around helping to teach the dance classes.

Rosario, standing just 4 feet, 11 inches, is 20 years old. A special student at Penn State now, she attended Connecticut College for Women for two years. Her husband, a junior in petroleum engineering, is 5 feet 9 inches.

Rosario has had lots of experience teaching college friends at Connecticut, and has studied Spanish dancing and ballet in Bolivia and the United States.

While at Connecticut, Rosario dated the Coast Guard cadets at the academy across the way. "They were wonderful, but when they started to dance they all stopped talking," she said. "I couldn't understand this, and I asked one of them why he didn't talk . . . was there anything wrong?"

"He said he was counting. You know . . . one, two, three this way, and one, two the other way. And every time I'd talk to him, he'd get mixed up and step on my feet."

Rosario insists that her students will come out of her class being able to talk while they dance. She is going to teach them to dance to the music, learn the basic steps, and then forget about them.

She might even find enough talent in this Nittany vale to organize a troupe and tour the country. At least she hopes some of her class will be able to get together with the Spanish Club and perhaps put on a Latin American show.

Who, Me?

"Sorry, you're the 20th girl we've had to turn down." This a painful thing to have to tell a coed who has been asked to submit a portrait for a contest. Specifically we're talking about the Homecoming Queen contest. But this applies to all contests where a photograph is needed. In general, most of the girls were notified much too late to have a portrait made. This has happened a number of times previously. We decided to use this contest as an example in an attempt to trace the persons responsible for the short notice. But we found too much buck passing and gave it up. Contest officials claimed the contest was announced quite a while ago, while contestants claimed they were notified only a few days ago. We write this in protest and as a lesson to those responsible for future contests.

If this 'one day grace on the Homecoming Queen contest was designed as an aid to local photographers, we'd like someone to tell us all about it. We've been turning down girls since last Thursday rather than promise them something we couldn't deliver. Don't you realize that many of these girls can't send home for pictures, and must have one taken up here. And you coeds, we hope you take the above advice. There are about 8 or 9 contests each semester. For your own good, if you believe you are contest material, don't wait until the last minute. Sorority officers, select a girl early enough so she has a chance to have a portrait made, thus assuring her entrance into the contest.

No, we don't enjoy turning down sittings, but we have to draw a line somewhere. A poor rush job or a fine portrait—we offer you the latter.

Sincerely,
Bill Coleman
